quote - apostasy - youth - Brewer : ☩ + "I once listened to a conversation . . . between two young men returning after the close of a summer's vacation to the college at which both were students. The principal talker was, I discovered in the course of the afternoon, an only son. On his upper lip was the first dark shadow of a coming mustache. He possessed that peculiar wisdom which belongs in this world to only the college sophomore. He was expressing to his companion his views on the Bible and religion, said he knew too much to believe in either; admitted that his mother believed in both and read her Bible every day; said that that might do for women and children, but not for any intelligent man in the light of present scientific knowledge. You would have thought that Darwin and Huxley and Lord Kelvin had studied at his feet and that he was the Gamaliel of the present day. It is impossible to reproduce in language the self-sufficient sneering tone in which he spoke of the Bible, classing it with nursery rhymes, the story of Jack and the Beanstalk and the like, and the complacent pity with which he referred to those who were foolish enough to regard it as a sacred book. It is to be hoped that the budding sophomore lived long enough to learn that no gentleman speaks sneeringly of that which has been the life-long faith and comfort of his mother." David J. quote - atheist - Christian faith beneficial : ☩ + "After returning from a visit to Malawi, where he has spent his childhood, Parris wrote an article entitled "As an atheist, I truly believe Africa needs God." The subtitle was this: "Missionaries, not aid money, are the solution to Africa's biggest problem--the crushing passivity of the people's mind set." [Seeing the work of a small British charity there] inspired me, renewing my flagging faith in developing charities. But traveling in Malawi refreshed another belief, too: one I've been trying to banish all my life, but an observation I've been unable to avoid since my African childhood. It confounds my ideological belief that there is no God. Now a confirmed atheist, I've become convinced of the enormous contribution that Christian evangelism makes in Africa. . . . I used to avoid this truth by applauding--as you can--the practical work of mission churches in Africa. It's a pity, I would say, that salvation is part of the package, but Christians black and white, working in Africa, do heal the sick, do teach people to read and write; and only the severest kind of secularist could see a mission hospital or school and say the world would be better without it. I would allow that if faith was needed to motivate missionaries to help, then, fine: but what counted was that help, not faith. But this doesn't fit the facts. Faith does more than support the missionary; it is also transferred to his flock. This is the effect that matters so immensely, and which I cannot help observing. Coming from Parris this is nothing less than astounding." Ravi Zacharias, Has Christianity Failed You?

quote - bible contents : "This book contains: the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrine is holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be saved, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter. Here heaven is opened, and the gates of hell disclosed. Christ is its grand subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently, and prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, health to the soul, and a river of pleasure. It is given to you here in this life, will be opened at the Judgment, and is established forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and condemn all who trifle with its contents." -- Author unknown, cited in Richard L. quote - bible translations - easy : ☉ + "I fear that much of the cry for a translation which requires little effort to understand is rooted in the itch of our age for instant gratification. Many in a generation raised in the climate of instant everything (instant coffee, instant potatoes, instant-on radio and television, microwave ovens, no-iron fabrics, computerized instant banking services - the list is virtually endless) have come to regard instant spirituality and instant Bible knowledge as their birthright. The idea that one must labour over the Word of God in order to mine its gold is a revolutionary concept to many in our day." Ref-0088, p. 21. "It is better to teach each new generation the meaning of the Bible's technical terms than to eliminate them and produce a generation of supposedly biblically literate people, who in reality are biblically and theologically illiterate from having suffered long-term exposure to inaccurate and imprecise versions of the Bible." Ref-0088, p. 38. "Perhaps this generation of Bible translators will continue to embrace orthodox views of Scripture while using the dynamic method of translation. But history teaches that inconsistency in one generation becomes heterodoxy in the next. Where the dynamic method of translation is embraced, it is but one small step to the embracing of the dynamic view of inspiration as well [that the ideas of scripture are inspired rather than the actual words]." Ref-0088, p. 69. "In the GNB (Good News Bible), NIV, JB, and NEB 'cutting off' [Gal. 5:12] is interpreted as referring to the deprivation of the male reproductive glands. In the PME and the LB (Living Bible), a different interpretation is adopted. The statement is made to mean separation from the Christian assembly. The added responsibility of the dynamic-equivalence translator is made apparent by this comparison. He has also become a commentator. . . Without acknowledging that he has done so, such a translator has attached his own personal interpretation to the text, thereby excluding from the reader a consideration of the other possible meanings of the text. A literal translation can, on the other hand, often leave the same obscurity in the English text as is found in the original." Ref-0110, pp. 316-317. Malachi said that he should "suddenly come to his temple," and Zechariah that he would come to Zion "riding upon an ass, upon a colt the foal of an ass;" whilst, according to Isaiah, "the land of Zebulun and the land of Naphtali" were to see the "great light." All these presentations were his coming. . . . Each one of these particular incidents is alike called his coming; but they were only so many separate presentations, at different dates, extending through a period of thirty-three years, all of which together are required to make up the first advent as a whole. The second coming, like the first, is complex and distributive, extending through a variety of successive and diverse scenes, stages, events, and manifestations, requiring as many, if not still more years. quote - creation - EPA : Gen. 1:1; John 1:1 ☩ + "God created the Heaven and the Earth. Quickly He was faced with a class action suit for failure to file an environmental impact statement. He was granted a temporary permit for the heavenly part of the project, but was stymied with a cease and desist order for the earthly part. Appearing at the hearing, God was asked why He began His earthly project in the first place. He replied that He just liked to be creative! Then God said, 'Let there be light' and immediately the officials demanded to know how the light would be made. Would there be strip mining? What about thermal pollution? God explained that the light would come from a huge ball of fire. God was granted permission to make light, assuming that no smoke would result from the ball of fire, and to conserve energy, the light would have to be out half of the time. God agreed and said He would call the light 'Day' and the darkness, 'Night.' The officials replied that they were not interested in semantics. God said, 'Let the Earth bring forth green herb and such as may seed.' The Environmental Protection Agency agreed so long as native seed was used. Then God said, 'Let the waters bring forth the creeping creatures having life; and the fowl that may fly over the Earth.' Officials pointed out that this would require the approval of the Game and Fish Commission coordinated with the Heavenly Wildlife Federation and the Audubongelic Society. Everything was okay until God said He wanted to complete the project in six days. Officials said that it would take at least 100 days to review the application and impact statement. Somehow, the fellow didn't think that gave him any direction for his problem, so he closed his eyes again and opened his Bible to another passage. ☩ + "There is a prevalent conviction that the faith the church has confessed in the past is not adequate for a post-Enlightenment culture; the idea that the faith must be accommodated to culture has undermined the teaching of the church's faith. Popular evangelical faith has developed a bias against theology (not to mention the intellect) and has elevated the bias to the level of a virtue, defending it as vigorously as democracy. This is reflected more and more in the pulpits of professing evangelical churches. Doctrine . . . is purposely avoided. . . . They focus on practical matters, such as family concerns and personal growth, not doctrine, sometimes mixing psychotherapeutic concepts with biblical teaching.. They often emphasize religious experience. They seek to feel God's love, not understand church theology, a theme that plays well with the decreasing importance

The whole emphasis has been placed upon religion as a power which can do things for us and which can make us happy. The emotional and feeling side of religion has been over-emphasized at the expense of the intellect. Far too often people have thought of the Christian religion merely as something which gives a constant series of miraculous deliverances from all sorts and kinds of ills. The slogans of which we have heard so much testify to this. The phrases most frequently used have been 'Try Religion' or 'Try prayer', and the impression has often been given that we have but to ask God for whatever we may chance to need and we shall be satisfied . . . We have been so intent upon ourselves and our moods and feelings and inward states, that when we are confronted by an external problem that nevertheless affects us profoundly, we do not know how to think or where to begin." quote - doctrine - avoided - Pink :

☩ + "In addition to the widespread effects of unscriptural teaching, we also have to reckon with the deplorable superficiality of the present generation. To announce that a certain book is a treatise on doctrine is quite sufficient to prejudice against it the great bulk of church-members and most of our preachers as well. The craving today is for something light and spicy, and few have patience, still less desire, to examine carefully that which would make a demand both upon their hearts and their mental powers." ☩ + "The Rev. Michael Saward has described the 'disturbing legacy' of the 1960's and 1970's in these words: A generation brought up on guitars, choruses, and home group discussions. Educated, as one of them put it to me, not to use words with precision because the image is dominant, not the word. Equipped not to handled doctrine but rather to 'share'. A compassionate, caring generation, suspicious of definition and labels, uneasy at, and sometimes incapable of, being asked to wrestle with sustained didactic exposition of theology. Excellent when it comes to providing religious music, drama, and art. Not so good when asked to preach and teach the Faith or to express it in writing." Ref-0935, pp. 794-795.

Nothing can change the fact that the elect will be saved and the nonelect will not. Two points should be made by way of response. One is that God has rendered certain the end, his plan also includes the means to that end. His plan may well include that our witness is the means by which an elect person will come to saving faith. . . The other consideration is that we do not know in detail what God's plan is. So we must proceed on the basis of what God quote - emotionalism vs. rationalism - church history : ☺ + "This trend is characteristic of the pendulum swing between emotionalism and intellectualism that has been evidenced throughout church history. In the second century AD, Montanism was a move to experience over doctrine, while Gnosticism in the second to third centuries was a move in the other direction, toward a heretical rationalism. In the third through tenth centuries, monasticism swung the pendulum back to the emotional with its focus on contemplation; then there was again a swing back toward the intellect with Scholasticism, in the eleventh to fourteenth centuries. In reaction, the fourteenth to fifteenth centuries experienced the advent of mysticism, rebounding back to the intellectual with the Reformation in the sixteenth to seventeenth centuries. Out of the reformation came Pietism and Methodism in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, swinging the pendulum back to an emotional focus with the twentieth-century advent of Pentecostalism and Charismatic movements." In his Preface to the 1959 (100th anniversary) edition of Origin of Species, Professor W. R. Thompson, FRS, detailed the shortcomings of evolutionary theory, and then commented: "It is therefore right and proper to draw the attention of the non-scientific public to the disagreements about evolution. But some recent remarks of evolutionists show that they think this unreasonable. This situation, where scientific men rally to the defense of a doctrine they are unable to define, much less demonstrate with scientific rigour, attempting to maintain its credit with the public by the suppression of criticisms and the elimination of difficulties, is abnormal and undesirable in science." If a man prefers to look for his kindred in the zoological gardens, it is of no concern of mine; if he wants to believe that the founder of his family was an ape, a gorilla, a mud-turtle, or a monar [moner], he may do so; but when he insists that / shall trace my lineage in that direction, I say No sir! . . . I prefer that my genealogical table shall end as it now does, with "Cainan, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God," rather than invent one which reads, "Which was the son of a skeptic, which was the son of monkey, which was the son of oyster, which was the son of monar, which was the son of mud!" -- a genealogical table which begins in the mud and ends in the gravel, which has a monar at the head, a monkey in the middle, and an infidel at the tail." quote - evolution - illusory - Lewis : ☺ + ". . . universal evolutionism is a kind of optical illusion, produced by attending exclusively to the [checken's] emergence from the egg. We are taught from childhood to notice how the perfect oak grows from the acorn and to forget that the acorn itself was dropped by a perfect oak. We are reminded constantly that the adult human being was an embryo, never that the life of the embryo came from two adult human beings. We love to notice that the express engine of to-day is the descendant of the 'Rocket'; we do not equally remember that the 'Rocket' sprints not from some even more rudimentary engine, but from something much more perfect and complicated than itself--namely, a man of genius. The obviousness of naturalness which most people seem to find in the idea of emergent evolution thus seems to be a pure hallucination." C. S. Lewis, The Weight of Glory (Simon and Schuster, New York, NY: 1996), p. 104 cited in Jerry Bergman, "C. S. Lewis: creationist and anti-evolutionist", Ref-0784, 23(3) 2009, 110:115, p. 112.

quote - evolution - incompatible with Christianity : ☺ + "Without Adam, without the original sin, Jesus Christ is reduced to a man with a mission on the wrong planet. Sin becomes not an ugly fate due to man's disobedience, but only the struggle of instincts. Christianity has fought, still fights, and will fight science to the desperate end over evolution, because evolution destroys utterly and finally the very reason Jesus' earthly life was supposedly made necessary. Destroy Adam and Eve and the original sin, and in the rubble you will find the sorry remains of the son of god. Take away the meaning of his death. If Jesus was not the redeemer who died for our sins, and this is what evolution means, then Christianity is nothing! Christianity, if it is to survive, must have Adam and the original sin and the fall from grace or it cannot have Jesus the redeemer who restores to those who believe what Adam's disobedience took away." Bozarth, G.R., The Meaning of Evolution, American Atheist, 1978, 20:30. "I live on the other side of Charles Darwin. And Charles Darwin not only made us Christians face the fact that the literal creation story cannot be quite so literal, but he also destroyed the primary myth by which we had told the Jesus story for centuries. That myth suggested that there was a finished creation from which we human beings had fallen into sin, and therefore needed a rescuing divine presence to lift us back to what God had originally created us to be. But Charles Darwin says that there was no perfect creation because it is not yet finished. It is still unfolding. And there was no perfect human life which then corrupted itself and fell into sin, there was rather a single cell that emerged slowly over 4.5 to 5 billion years, into increasing complexity, into increasing consciousness. And so the story of Jesus who comes to rescue us from the Fall becomes a nonsensical story. So how can we tell the Jesus story with integrity and with power, against the background of humanity that is not fallen but is simply unfinished?"

quote - evolution - intelligence - evidence :

☪ + “Despite the mega-billions of dollars spent on the search for extraterrestrial life, it has often been pointed out that the universe gives the appearance of being designed specifically for life in the only place we find it -- the earth. When these same scientists swap their telescopes for microscopes, and look at the DNA molecule contained in every living creature, they see highly coded information as part of the most complex language system in the universe. This is the very same intelligence for which they are searching the heavens? They claim this information evolved by chance, yet if they were to receive even an extremely simple ordered sequence from space, they would say it was a sign of intelligence!” Gary Bates, “SETI: Coming in from the Cold of Space”, Ref-0028, 26(3) June-August 2004, p. 50. “It is therefore no surprise to find a fundamental contradiction lying right at the very heart of the SETI program. SETI pioneer Professor Carl Sagan devised a set of four criteria that they could use to distinguish possible intelligent communications among the constant noise of radio static that comes from all parts of the sky. When those four criteria were applied to the information on the DNA molecule (to see if it comes from an intelligent source), it passed the test. So, the criteria that would alert the SETI astronomers of the presence of “evolved” life in outer space would tell them, if they wanted to know, that life did not evolve -- it came from an intelligent Creator.” Ref-0814, p. 161.

☪ + “All worldviews have adopted certain ‘first principles’ that cannot be proved scientifically. A naturalistic scientist cannot prove his first principles, for no scientist has ever seen life coming from nonliving matter. Life comes from living things. This fits well with the Christian set of first principles. Christians believe that life, namely, the living God, is the source of all life.” David J. quote - evolution vs. creation : ☪ + “many get the impression that the creation/evolution debate is only about the book of Genesis. After all, there are 65 other books in the Bible, so it cannot be that important a debate on that basis. However people settle that issue, we still have all the rest of the Bible with Jesus, sin, salvation, the cross, resurrection, and so on, so it does not really matter very much, does it? Well that would be a big error, because the debate over creation and evolution is not just a debate about the historical details of Genesis. It is about every single one of those books of the Bible. It is about whether God is real or imaginary. That is what the debate is about. Is God real or imaginary? Did God create man or did man create God? This is the subject.” Phillip Johnson, Evolution and Christian Faith, Ref-0066 15.1 (2002), p. 11

quote - experience - doctrine - balance - Lloyd-Jones :

☪ + “We seem to be opposing everything and thus we receive criticisms from all sides. . . For myself as long as I am charged by certain people with being nothing but a Pentecostalist and on the other hand with being an intellectual, a man who is always preaching doctrine, as long as the two criticisms come I am very happy, but if one or the other should ever cease, then is the time to be careful and to begin to examine the very foundations. The position of the Scripture as I am trying to show you is one which is facing two extremes. The Spirit is essential, experience is vital, truth and definition and doctrine and dogma are equally vital and essential, and our whole position is one which proclaims this, that experience which is not based solidly upon truth and doctrine is dangerous.” Martyn Lloyd-Jones, Ref-0935, p. 160.

quote - family - separation - Rydelnik :

☪ + “In 1996 I received a phone call from my cousin in Israel, telling me that my father had just died. A Holocaust survivor and an Orthodox Jew, my father had cut all ties with me when I became a follower of Yeshua (Jesus). He moved to Israel and refused contact with me. Despite my repeated efforts to reach my father through the years, he would never respond. When he died, his only surviving sibling, my aunt, instructed the entire family not to let me know of his passing. Gratefully one of my Israeli cousins refused this last painful demand and called me. . . . If someone could have earned his way into heaven on the basis of suffering, certainly my father could have. He lost his first wife, five sons, and an adopted daughter to the gas chambers of Auschwitz. He himself had suffered miserably in the Lodz ghetto and then in several concentration camps. After the war, he remarried and his new wife died while giving birth to my half brother. Then he married my mother, with whom he had a daughter (my sister Esther), who died in a drowning accident in Berlin when she was two years old. After this tragedy my parents moved to America and tried to rebuild their lives. More than twenty years later my mother, my two sisters, and I confessed faith in Yeshua, causing my father to disown us and move to Israel. . . . When my cousin called to notify me of my father’s death, as we were about to hang up, she remembered one last thing she wanted to tell me. On the day before he died, a woman from the Unities States entered my father’s hospital room to visit her own father in the next bed. She happened to see my father’s name on a piece of tape on the wall. So she turned to him and asked if he was related to professor Michael Rydelnik from Chicago. He responded by saying, “He used to be my son, but he is dead to me.” I do not know who this woman is. She has never made any effort to contact me. But according to my cousin she angered my aunt by coming to my father’s deathbed and sharing with him about Yeshua. She told him that Yeshua is the Messiah and that atonement and forgiveness or sin are available through Him. So far as I know, my father rejected here message and died the following day of kidney failure. Yet I can see the mercy and grace of God, for at the very end the Lord sent another ambassador to my father, in the form of an unknown American Jewish believer.” Michael A. Ideally, of course, one world government would seem to furnish the answer to many difficult problems, provided the word was made up of only the right kind of people. But the trouble has been that, ever since the fall of Adam, the world has had the wrong kind of people . . . (Rom. 3:23). And in such a world there is mortal danger in a single and total world government. So then, all the years of the former and latter desolation of Jerusalem have been four hundred and sixty-five years, and when thou dost deduct from them the seventy years of Babylon, they have been three hundred and ninety-five years. All this argument have I written to thee, because the Jews pride themselves, (saying), "It has been covenanted to us, that we shall be gathered." For if Sodom, whose iniquity was not so great as that of Jerusalem, is not as yet inhabited, and if we say thus, that it will not be restored for ever, how shall Jerusalem be restored, whose iniquity is greater than that of Sodom and her daughters?" Objections based on the supposed improbability of such an event are sufficiently answered by marking the connection between prophecy and miracle. The history of the Abrahamic race, to which prophecy is so closely related, is little else than a record of miraculous interpositions. . . . the question is one of peculiar interest on general grounds, whether passing events are not tending towards this very consummation, the restoration of the Jews to Palestine." Its annexation by any one European state is in the highest degree improbable. The interests of several of the first-rate Powers forbid it. The way will thus be kept open to the Jews, whenever their inclinations or their destinies lead them back to the land of their fathers. . . . the probabilities of the case . . . are in favour of the colonization

A large number more from all parts of the world will in all probability soon be gathered; but we shall only be able to speak of a restoration of the Jews as an accomplished fact when Palestine becomes by international consent (to quote from the Zionist programme) the 'openly recognized and legally assured home' of the Jews, i.e., when the Jews are once more acknowledged as a nation with a land of their own to which they might go." (1635-1711) : ☉ + "A further example of a more pro-Judaic European eschatology that appeared in the seventeenth century was that expressed by Wilhelmus a Brakel (1635-1711), an esteemed Dutch Reformed theologian who ministered in Rotterdam, Holland, having eschatological views that contrasted with the more standard Augustinian variety, Willem VanGemeren explains that, in objecting to Calvin, Braken held that, "the Church could not be identified with the New Israel. When Paul wrote about "all Israel" (Rom. 11:25) he was referring to the nation, and not the totality of the church and national Israel. This rejection of Calvin was also found in Brakel's contemporaries. Braken expected all twelve tribes to repent and express faith in Jesus as the Messiah. He also held that the Jews would be privileged to return to their land. The promise of the land is not just a type of the eternal rest or of heaven, rather it is part and parcel with the covenant of grace which God made to and affirmed with Israel. Brakel kept Israel and church together." Brakel . . . wrote, "Will the Jewish nation be gathered together again from all the regions of the world and from all the nations of the earth among which they have been dispersed? Will they come to and dwell in Canaan and all the lands promised to Abraham, and will Jerusalem be rebuilt? We believe that these events will transpire. We deny, however, that the temple will be rebuilt, and that therein the previous mode of worship will be observed, which prior to Christ's coming was of a typifying nature and would then be of a reflective nature. The Jews shall be gathered from all parts of the earth where they now are scattered, and brought home into their own land. II. They shall be carried by the Gentiles to their place; who shall join themselves with the Jews, and become the Lord's people. III. Great miracles shall be wrought when Israel is restored, as formerly when they were brought out of Egypt--viz.: 1. Drying up the river Euphrates. 2. Causing rivers to flow in desert places. 3. Giving them prophets. 4. The Lord Christ himself shall appear at the head of them. IV. The Jews, being restored, and converted to the faith of Christ, shall be formed into a State, and have Judges and Counsellors over them as formerly: the Lord Christ himself being their King, who shall them also be acknowledged King over all the earth. V. They shall have the victory over all their enemies, and all kings and nations of the earth shall submit unto them. VI. The Jews, restored, shall live peaceably, without being divided into two nations, or contending with one another any more. VII. The land of Judea shall be made eminently fruitful, like a Paradise, or the Garden of God. VIII. Jerusalem shall be rebuilt, and after the full restoration of the Jews shall never be destroyed, nor infested with enemies any more." quote - Israel - nation predicted - Spurgeon (1855) : Eze. 24:26; Eze. 37:1-10 ☩ + “Preaching on Ezek 24:26 in 1855, just prior to the rise of modern Zionism, he [Spurgeon] declared, Not long shall it be ere they [the Jews] shall come--shall come from distant lands, where'er they rest or roam; and she who has been the off-scouring of all things, whose name has been a proverb and a bye-word, shall become the glory of all lands. Dejected Zion shall raise her head, shaking herself from dust, and darkness, and the dead. Then shall the Lord feed his people, and make them and the places round about his hill a blessing. I think we do not attach sufficient importance to the restoration of the Jews. We do not think enough of it. But certainly, if there is anything promised in the bible it is this. I imagine that you cannot read the bible without seeing clearly that there is to be an actual restoration of the children of Israel. C. H. Spurgeon, The C. H. Spurgeon Collection, Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, I, no. 28, 1855 ([Albany, Oregon: Ages Software, 1998), 382] Ref-1263, pp. 11-12. “Speaking on Ezek 37:1-10 in 1864 at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in aid of funds for the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel amongst the Jews, Spurgeon declared, This vision has been used, from the time of Jerome onwards, as a description of the resurrection, and certainly it may be so accommodated with much effect. . . . But while this interpretation of the vision may be very proper as an accommodation, it must be quite evident to any thinking person that this is not the meaning of the passage. There is no allusion made by Ezekiel to the resurrection, and such topic would have been quite apart from the design of the prophet's speech I believe he was no more thinking of the resurrection of the dead than of the building of St. Peter's at Rome, or the emigration of the Pilgrim Fathers. . . . The meaning of our text, as opened up by the context, is most evidently, if words mean anything, first, that there shall be a political restoration of the Jews to their own land and to their own nationality; an then, secondly, there is in the text, and in the context, a most plain declaration, that there shall be a spiritual restoration, a conversion in fact, of the tribes of Israel. . . . If there be meaning in words this must be the meaning of this chapter. I wish never to learn the art of tearing God's meaning out of his own words. If there be anything clear and plain, the literal sense and meaning of this passage--a meaning not to be spirited or spiritualized away--must be evident that both the two and the ten tribes of Israel are to be restored to their own land, and that a king is to rule over them. C. H. Spurgeon, The C. H. Spurgeon Collection, Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit, X, no. 582:533 1864 ([Albany, Oregon: Ages Software, 1998), 536-37] Ref-1263, pp. 11-12. “In 1887 [Spurgeon] declared, We cannot help looking for the restoration of the scattered Israelites to the land which God has given to them by a covenant of salt: we also look for the time when they shall believe in the Messiah whom they have rejected, and shall rejoice in Jesus of Nazareth, whom today they despise. There is great encouragement in prophecy to those who work among the seed of Israel; and it is greatly needed, for of all mission fields it has been commonly represented to be the most barren, and upon the work the utmost ridicule has been poured. God has said, “I will save the tents of Judah first.” This is the first stage of restoration...There is, then, a partial and primary restoration of Jews before the manifestation, which is to serve as the nucleus, or basis, of future operations in the restoration of the rest of the tribes after he has appeared in the kingdom. This even may be easily accomplished if the nations that shall weaken the Turks make this one of their demands, namely, that they which yield up the holly land to its rightful owners, the Jews, to repossess which God sware to give to the patriarchs and their posterity.” He even foresaw a great conflict to take place here. “The nations round them will make a general combination against them when they least expect it and will gather a numerous and very formidable host to effect their destruction. I believe that God's purpose regarding our world can only be understood by understanding God's purpose as to Israel. I believe that all human calculations as to the earth's future, whether political or scientific, or philosophical or religious, must be failures, if not taking for their data or basis God's great purpose regarding the latter-day standing of Israel.* [H. quote - Israel - prophetic importance - Edwards : ☩ + “[Jonathan] Edwards . . . considered it virtually indisputable that the Jews have been miraculously preserved over many centuries . . . “Nothing is more certainly foretold than this national conversion of the Jews is in the eleventh chapter of Romans. And there are also many passages of the Old Testament that can't be interpreted in any other sense, that I can't now stand to mention. Besides the prophecies of the calling of the Jews, we have a remarkable seal of the fulfillment of this great event in providence by a thing that is a kind of continual miracle, viz. the preserving them a distinct [nation] when in such a dispersed condition for above sixteen hundred years. The world affords nothing else like it--a remarkable hand of providence. When they shall be called, then shall that ancient people that were alone God's people for so long a time be God's people again, never to be rejected more, one fold with the Gentiles; and then also shall the remains of the ten tribes wherever they are, and though they have been rejected much longer than [the Jews] be brought in with their brethren, the Jews. The prophecies of Hosea especially seem to hold this forth, and that in the future glorious times of the church both Judah and Ephraim, or Judah and the ten tribes, shall be brought in together, and shall be united as one people as they formerly were under David and Solomon (Hos. 1:11), and so in the last chapter of Hosea, and other parts of his prophecy." With regard to this vital matter of national Israel's present existence or nonexistence according to divine covenant, history plainly leads us to an unavoidable conclusion: profound ethical and practical consequences are involved here--even issues of life and death."

quote - Israel - prophetic importance - Ryle :

☪ + "J. C. Ryle explained this inescapable truth as follows: "I assert then that the Jews are at this moment a peculiar people, and utterly separate from all other people on the face of the earth. They fulfill the prophecy of Hosea: "The children of Israel shall bide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice" (Hos. 3:4). For eighteen hundred years they have been scattered over the globe, without a country without a government, without a capital city, strangers and aliens everywhere, often fiercely persecuted and vilely treated. Yet to this moment they continue a distinct, isolated and separate nation, farm more than any nation on the earth. Now how shall we account for this extraordinary state of things? How shall we explain the unique and peculiar position which the Jewish people occupies in the world? Why is it that, unlike Saxons, and Danes, and Normans, and Flemings, and French, this singular race still floats alone, though broken to pieces like a wreck, on the waters of the globe, amidst its 1500 million inhabitants, and after the lapse of eighteen hundred years is neither destroyed, nor crushed, nor evaporated, nor amalgamated, not lost sight of, but lives to this day as separate and distinct as it was when the arch of Titus was built in Rome? I have not the least idea how questions like these are answered by those who profess to deny the divine authority of Scripture. In all my reading I never met with an honest attempt to answer them from the unhappy camp of unbelievers. In fact, it is my firm conviction that among the many difficulties of infidelity there is hardly any one more really insurmountable than the separate continuance of the Jewish nation. It is a burdensome stone which your modern skeptical writers may affect to despise, but cannot lift or remove out of their way. God has many witnesses to the truth of the Bible, if men would only examine them and listen to their evidence. But you may depend on it there is no witness so unanswerable as one who always keeps standing up and living, and moving before the eyes of mankind. That witness is the Jew." What is going to happen next? He that believeth will not make haste. I will not pretend to decide. But I think I hear the voice of God saying, "Remember the Jews, look to Jerusalem." J. C. Was it in order that they might walk 'in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost'? The facts speak for themselves. Thus I ask the questions: Had we a right to peace? Do we deserve peace? Were we justified in asking God to preserve peace and to grant peace? What if war has come because we by our disobedience and godlessness and sinfulness had so utterly abused the blessings of peace? Have we a right to expect God to preserve a state of peace merely to allow men and women to continue a life that is an insult to His holy Name?" Martyn Lloyd-Jones, [Ref-0935, pp. 25-26.

quote - permanence of Jews - Emperor Frederick's chaplain : ☩ + "The great Prussian Emperor Frederick often would test his chaplain with theological questions.

Frederick, however, said he did not have time for long answers and explanations. He wanted simple answers that he could comprehend quickly. One day he asked his chaplain if he could provide simple and succinct evidence for the truth of the Bible. Frederick asked if the chaplain could provide evidence in just one word. The wise chaplain responded that he could do just that. 'What is the magical word?' Frederick asked. The chaplain replied, 'Israel, your majesty. The people of Israel.'" quote - permanence of Jews - Mark Twain :

☺ + "If the statistics are right, the Jews constitute but one quarter of one percent of the human race. It suggests a nebulous dim puff of star dust lost in the blaze of the Milky Way. Properly, the Jew ought hardly to be heard of; but he is heard of, has always been heard of. He is as prominent on the planet as any other people, and his importance is extravagantly out of proportion to the smallness of his bulk. His contributions to the world's list of great names in literature, science, art, music, finance, medicine and abstruse learning are also way out of proportion to the weakness of his numbers. . . . The Egyptian, the Babylonians, and the Persians rose, filled the planet with sound and splendour, then faded to dream-stuff and passed away; the Greek and the Roman followed, and made a vast noise, and they were gone; . . . The Jew saw them all, survived them all, and is now what he always was. . . . All things are mortal but the Jew; all other forces pass, but he remains. What is the secret of his immortality?" Its survival is a mysterious and wonderful phenomenon demonstrating that the life of this people is governed by a special predetermination, transcending the processes of adaptation expounded by the materialistic interpretation of history. One day his friend asked Carl if he would like to go to church with him. Carl asked his parents, and they agreed to let him go if Carl's friend would go with him the next week to the Armerdings' local church. Both sets of parents agreed to the arrangement. Carl went, and he admitted that he was impressed with the liturgy, the candles, the incense, the altar, the stained glass, and the high vaulted ceilings. "Well," his friend asked, "how did you like it?" Carl was noncommittal. He answered, "It was new to me." The next week they attended Carl's home church, a little store-front gospel hall that served as the meeting place of a Brethren assembly. As was their custom, the Christians there celebrated the Lord's Supper with the chairs arranged in a circle around a plain table with a loaf of bread and a cup of wine. There was singing, prayer, and some Bible exposition. "Well," Carl asked his friend on the way home, "how did you like it?" His friend answered, "It's all right for them that likes it, but you ain't got no priest!" Carl reported the conversation to his father who said, "But Carl, we do have a priest. All such alliances thus humanly originated have been based on selfish motives and opportunist policies on both side, and hence must always break down in the end. Since each side pays a price for the unnatural union, and the price is ever increasing, the break becomes inevitable (cf. Rev. 17). - quote - truth and grace : John 1:14-17 ☺ + "Often, conservatives emphasize truth (morals) and liberals emphasize grace (compassion). Conservatives want to conserve what's right; liberals want to liberate from what's wrong. Liberals' commitment to fighting racism in the sixties was commendable. But sometimes liberals fight against true standards, like the beliefs that abortion, fornication, adultery, and homosexual behavior are wrong. They embrace tolerance as a grace substitute. Liberal Christians often end up being liberals first, Christians second. Conservatives want to restore lost values. They want to go back to the days when prayer was allowed in schools. But they forget that the same schools that allowed prayer didn't allow black children! By trying to conserve so many things -- even things that were clearly wrong -- conservative Christians have sometimes been conservatives first, Christians second. Why should we have to choose between conservatism's emphasis on truth and liberalism's emphasis on grace? Why can't we oppose injustice to minorities and to the unborn? Why can't we oppose greedy ruination of the environment and anti-industry New Age environmentalism? Why can't we affirm the biblical right to ownership of property and emphasize God's call to voluntarily share wealth with the needy? Why can't we uphold God's condemnation of sexual immorality, including homosexual practices, and reach out in love and compassion to those trapped in destructive lifestyles and dying from AIDS? We cannot do these things if we are first and foremost either liberals or conservatives. We can do these things only if we are first and foremost followers of Christ, who is full of grace and truth." -- Randy Alcorn, "The Grace and Truth Paradox," Multnomah Publishers, 2003, pp. 79-81, cited by Ref-0228, May 7, 2004.

"Students of the Masorah owe Jacob ben Chayyim ibn Adonijah (dates uncertain, late fifteenth to sixteenth century) a great debt of gratitude, because he rescued the Masorah and restored it to its original function, the preservation of the text tradition. Ben Chayyim came to Italy around 1520 to escape persecution. In Venice, Daniel Bomberg's press specialized in Hebrew books, and ben Chayyim entered his employ about 1517 as a corrector. Bomberg had already published the First Rabbinic Bible, edited by Felix Pratensis (1516-17), but he was planning a new edition. The first edition had not been received well by Christians because of its Jewish emphasis, and Jews were not pleased that its editor, Pratensis, was a Jew converted to Christianity. Ben Chayyim, a learned Jew skilled in the Bible text, seemed an obvious choice to prepare the second edition. . . . by this time the Masorah had fallen into disuse and was reduced to mere ornamentation in many manuscripts. Thus, ben Chayyim had to select, order, analyze, and correct the material from his sources and collate it into his new edition. The Second Rabbinic Bible appeared in 1524-25.

Ben Chayyim converted to Christianity in 1527, leaving Bomberg with the same problem he had with Pratensis. Ben Chayyim's name was omitted from subsequent editions of the Bible." Ref-0842, p. 24.

Rachel - weeping : Jer. 31:15; Jer. 40:1-2; Mtt. 2:18 ☩ "Jeremiah 31:15 speaks of Ramah as the place of weeping because it was there the Babylonians gathered the captive young men of Judah before sending them into exile (Jer 40:1-2). There Rachel was said to weep for her children. Obviously, the matriarch Rachel had been long dead when Jeremiah wrote. So Jeremiah did not use her name literally (i.e., weeping from her grave) but rather symbolically, representing all of Jewish mothers. Thus Jeremiah states that Jewish mothers were weeping for their sons who had died in the war with Babylon and for the young men who were being taken to a distant land as captives. Jeremiah was referring to the deep pain of Jewish mothers at the loss of their young men to Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians. So the question is, Since Jer 31:15 refers to the Babylonian exile, how could Matthew cite the Slaughter of the innocents as fulfilling this text?" Ref-1272, p.

105. "The reason for Matthew's citation of Jer 31:15 was to show that Scripture had a continuing relevance. As David L. Cooper wrote, "Matthew simply applies the language of this prophecy to a similar situation of his day." Just as Rachel represented Jewish mothers who wept at the death and exile of their sons, so Jewish mothers once again mourned when wicked Herod murdered their children. And Rachel has continued to lament and has refused to be consoled for her children as they have been murdered by Crusaders, Nazis, and terrorists. Sadly, this is a Scripture that has had continued relevance for centuries." Ref-1272, p. 108. "[By quoting this text, Matthew] understood a principle in a biblical passage and then applied it to [his] contemporary situation. Thus Matthew recognized that Jeremiah wrote of the suffering of Rachel, the personification of Jewish mothers, at the exile. He, in turn, applied the principle that the Jewish mothers of Bethlehem still wept because of the suffering of their children at the hands of wicked Herod." Ref-1272, p. 108.

By measuring the amount of uranium and 'radiogenic lead' in these crystals, one can calculate that, if the decay rate has been constant, about 1.5 billion years must have passed. . . . However, there is a significant proportion of helium from that ?1.5 billion years of decay' still inside the zircons. . . . In fact, the results show that because of all the helium still in the zircons, these crystals (and since this is Precambrian basement granite, by implication the whole earth) could not be older than 14,000 years. In other words, in only a few thousand years, 1.5 billion years' worth (at today's rates) of radioactive decay has taken place. Interestingly, the data have since been refined and updated to give a date of 5,680 (+/- 2000) years. . . . Another dramatic breakthrough concerns radiocarbon. It's long been known that radiocarbon (i.e. carbon-14) keeps popping up reliably in samples (of coal, oil, gas, etc.) which are supposed to be 'millions of years' old. However, with the short half-life of C14 it should decay to zero in only some tens of thousands of years at most. . . . Dr. Baumgardner sent five diamonds to be analyzed for C14. It was the first time this had been attempted, and the answer came back positive -- C14 was present. The diamonds, formed deep inside the earth, are assumed by evolutionists to be over a billion years old. Nevertheless they contained radioactive carbon, even though, if the billion-year age were correct, they 'shouldn't have'. This is exceptionally striking evidence, because a diamond has remarkably strong lattice bonds (that's why it's the hardest substance known), so subsequent atmospheric or biological contamination should not find its way into the interior. The diamonds' carbon-dated 'age' of about 58,000 years is thus an upper limit for the age of the whole earth." radiohalos - young earth : ☼ + "The implications are astounding. First, the polonium halos required an abundant supply of polonium, in fact, an amount equivalent to 100 million years of radioactive decay of uranium, at today's rates. However, all this polonium had to be available quickly, before it could decay away. That is, it all had to concentrate within hours, or a few days at the most. Therefore, the polonium halos mean that 100 million years of radioactive decay of uranium (at today's rates) occurred in just a few days! In other words, the radioactive decay of uranium was formerly up to a billion times faster than it is today! Second, if uranium decayed at such a super-fast rate, the other radioactive elements decayed much faster too." Andrew A. Remember, these Roman numeral assignments to the Pharaoh's do not appear in the Egyptian records. They have been so designated by modern scholars, thus there well could have been a famous "Rameses" long before Rameses 1 as Genesis 47:11 strongly asserts. . . . In fact, the Scripture in question (Ex. 1:11) informs us that the City of Rameses (older names = Tanis, Zoan or Avaris) was under construction and completed before the birth of Moses (cp. rapture - origin of term : ☩ The word rapture is not found in the Bible. It is based on the Latin verb rapto, which means ‘to seize’ and ‘to carry off,’ taken from the phrase ‘caught up’ in the 1Th. 4:17 of the Latin Vulgate which reads: Deinde nos, qui vivimus, qui relinquimur, simul rapiemur cum illis in nubibus obviam Christo in aera, et sic semper cum Domino erimus. “. . . John Darby did not invent the Rapture. Huebner is correct when he explains, ‘The word rapture was in use, to designate the catching up of the saints, long before 1832. For example, Joseph Mede (1586-1638) wrote, Therefore, it is not needful that the resurrection of those which slept in Christ, and the rapture of those which shall be left alive together with them in the air. . .” Heubner, Precious Truths Revived and Defended, p. 95. Cited in Ref-0181, October 2002, p. 3.

rapture - partial - advocates : ☩ + “Dr. John F. Walvoord, in his book, The Rapture Question, mentions these writers: *The modern theory of partial rapture seems to have originated in the writings of Robert Govett who published a book setting forth the theory as early as 1853 (Entrance Into the Kingdom). In this book he expounds his view that participation in the kingdom is conditional and depends upon worthy conduct. The most able exponent of this split rapture teaching in the twentieth century is G.H. Lang (The Revelation of Jesus Christ; Firstborn Sons: Their Rights and Risks). Another was D.M. Panton, editor of The Dawn (London) magazine (pp. 105,106). Many others have succumbed to the partial rapture error, including G.H. Pember, A. Edwin Wilson, J.A. Seiss, Edward Irving, T. The purpose of the tribulation concerns Israel rather than the church (Jer 30:7; Dan 9:24). 2. There is an absence of any reference to the church on the earth in Rev 4-19. 3. The church is promised an exemption from divine wrath (1 Thess 10; 5:9; Rom 5:9) and the tribulation represents a time of divine wrath (Rev 6:17; 11:18; 15:1, 7; 16:1, 19). 4. Because the rapture is imminent it must take place before the tribulation period can begin (Jas 5:8; 1 Thess 1:10; 4:15; 1 Cor 1:7; 15:51; Philip 3:20). 5. The doctrine of the rapture is designed to comfort believers (John 14:1; 1 Thess 4:18; Titus 2:13). 6. If then ye prepare yourselves, and repent with all your heart, and turn to the Lord, it will be possible for you to escape it, if your heart be pure and spotless, and ye spend the rest of the days of your life in serving the Lord blamelessly.” Thomas Ice, The Rapture, John 14, and Myths, Ref-0055, March 2001, 36 quoting The Shepherd of Hermas 1.4.2

rapture - pretribulational - St. Victorinus : ☪ “As early as A.D. 270, St. Victorinus, Bishop of Petau, wrote a commentary on the book of Revelation in which he said, And I saw another great and wonderful sign, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is completed the indignation of God. For the wrath of God always strikes the obstinate people with seven plagues, that is, perfectly, as it is said in Leviticus; and these shall be in the last time, when the church shall have gone out of the midst [emphasis added]” St. Victorinus, Bishop of Petau, “The Writings of Tertullianus,” trans. rapture - pretribulational - views prior to 1800 : ☪ “Peter Jurieu in his book Approaching Deliverance of the Church (1687) taught that Christ would come in the air to Rapture the saints and return to heaven before the battle of Armageddon. He spoke of a secret Rapture prior to His coming in glory and judgment at Armageddon. Philip Doddridge’s commentary on the New Testament (1738) and John Gill’s commentary on the new Testament (1748) both use the term Rapture and speak of it as imminent. It is clear that these men believed that this coming will precede Christ’s descent to the earth and the time of judgment. The purpose was to preserve believers from the time of judgment. James Macknight (1763) and Thomas Scott (1792) taught that the righteous will be carried to heaven, where they will be secure until the time of judgment is over.” Thomas Ice, The Rapture, John 14, and Myths, Ref-0055, March 2001, 39, quoting Paul N. Benware, Understanding End Times Prophecy: A Comprehensive Approach, pp. 197-198 rapture - secret? : Heb. 9:28 ☪ “the common view that the resurrection will be a public affair, to be witnessed by the world, is now discarded as untenable in the light of Christ’s (also pertaining to “the first-fruits”) resurrection, which was strictly private. It is now held, and properly, that the members will be raised like the Head was (for if a public resurrection, humanly speaking, is desirable, then surely it ought to have been that of Christ’s), in order that the preparatory events for the coming judgment of the world may be introduced in such a manner (privately) as to establish “the snare” and “the net” intended for the unbelieving and wicked. Leading prophetic writers justly have no hesitancy in asserting that no mortal eye of unbelief shall behold the resurrection. This at once places the translation of the saints in a new aspect, and indicates, as it accompanies the resurrection, that it also is unseen (like Enoch’s and Elijah’s) by the world.” Ref-0141, 2:314-315.

At the rapture, believers depart the earth (1Th. 4:15-17), but at the final event of the second coming, unbelievers are taken away from the earth (Mtt. 24:37-41). 12. At the rapture, unbelievers remain on earth, but at the final event of the second coming, believers remain on earth (Mtt. 25:34). 13. At the rapture, there is no mention of establishing Christ’s Kingdom on earth, but at the final event of the second coming, Christ has come to set up His Kingdom on earth (Mtt. 25:31,34). Mayhue, Richard L., ‘Why a Pretribulational Rapture?’, Ref-0164, Vol. 13 No. 2, Fall 2002, pp. 247. “No one who diligently seeks the answer to this inquiry can fail to be impressed by the fact that at first sight some confusion seems to mark the statements of Scripture with respect to it. Certain passages testify that Christ will return to earth, and stand once more on that same Olivet on which His feet last rested ere He ascended to His Father; and others tell us as plainly that He will come, not to earth, but to the air above us, and call His people up to meet Him and be with Him. These Scriptures again most clearly prove that it is His believing people who shall be “caught up,” leaving the world to run its course to its destined doom; while other Scriptures as unequivocally teach that it is not His people but the wicked who are to be weeded out, leaving the righteous “to shine forth in the kingdom of their Father.” And the confusion apparently increases when we notice that Holy Writ seems sometimes to represent the righteous who are to be thus blessed as Jews, sometimes as Christians of a dispensation in which the Jew is cast off by God. These difficulties admit of only one solution, a solution as satisfactory as it is simple; namely, that what we term the second advent of Christ is not a single event, but includes several distinct manifestations. At the first of these He will call up to Himself the righteous dead, together with His own people then living upon earth. With this event this special “day of grace” will cease, and God will again revert to “the covenants” and “the promises,” and that people to whom the covenants and promises belong will once more become the centre of Divine action toward mankind.” Ref-0762, p. 154. “The sufferings of Christ and the glories which should follow” were foretold in such a way that a superficial reader of the old Scriptures would have failed to discover that there were to be two advents of Messiah. And even the careful student, if unversed in the general scheme of prophecy, might have supposed that the two advents, though morally distinct, should be intimately connected in time. So is it with the future. Some regard the second advent as a single event; by others its true character is recognised, but they fail to mark the interval which must separate its first from its final stage. An intelligent apprehension of the truth respecting it is essential to the right understanding of unfulfilled prophecy.” Ref-0762, p. 156.

"Rash lived in an era of religious disputations between Christians and Jews, which included both public debates and written pamphlets designed to convince Jewish people of the messiahship of Jesus based on messianic prophecy. Therefore, Rashi initiated the attempt to rebut Christian interpretation of messianic passages through the use of peshat. Thus, Rashi's commentaries reflect his desire to counter Christianity. Rosenthal sates, "Many a comment on a passage in the Pentateuch, in Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel or the Psalms is concluded with the statement that his interpretation is according to the plain sense and serves as 'an answer to the Christians.'" . . . Rashi's use of peshat took on an additional nuance." Ref-1272, p. 116. "In order to refute Christian claims, Rashi made a significant shift in the meaning of peshat: he equated the simple meaning of the text with the historical interpretation. This means that Rashi would often rebut the Christian claim that a given verse was messianic and referred to Jesus by countering that it referred "to a biblical historical person or event." Hence, Rashi no longer understood the peshat as the plain sense of the text but the historical sense. Moreover, Rashi frequently argued for the historical sense of a passage even if this meant that "he had to depart from traditional exposition." Ref-1272, p. 116. "Those who followed Rashi's view of peshat as referring to the historical sense included his grandson, Samuel ben Meir (also known as Rashbam, 1085-1174), Joseph Bekhor Shor (twelfth century), David Kimchi (also known as Radak, 1160-1235), Abraham Ibn Ezra (1089-1164), and Don Isaac Abravanel (1437-1509). Building upon Rashi's work, these scholars also used the historical sense to combat Christological interpretation and even emphasized this approach more than Rashi." Ref-1272, p. 118. ". . . the purpose of medieval Jewish exegesis was polemical. Peshat was used as a tool to advance an antimessianic, historical interpretation of the messianic texts. Thus, the literal sense of the Scriptures became identified with the historical sense. Hence, when the Reformers borrowed literal interpretation from Rashi and other medieval Jewish exegetes, . . ." Ref-1272, pp. 121-122. ". . . Rashi, in rejecting traditional interpretations, was not necessarily, as is sometimes maintained, departing from an allegorical messianic interpretation and instead adopting a literal one. Rather, he was departing from the literary and messianic interpretation to a historical understanding. . . . some of Rashi's interpretations are quite messianic while others are historical. The deciding factor was whether a particular messianic passage could be understood to refer to the first coming of Jesus or to Jesus' deity. If this was an issue, then Rashi would commonly interpret those texts as referring to a historical figure. However, if the passage fit the traditional Jewish conception of the Messiah or referred to what Christians perceived as the Second Coming, Rashi would maintain the messianic interpretation." Ref-1272, p. 117. "Psalm 2 is another example of Rashi's influence on messianic interpretation. . . . Rashi understood the text as having a historical referent, writing, "Our Sages [Ber. 7b] expounded the passage as referring to the King Messiah, but according to its apparent meaning [the peshat], it is proper to interpret it as referring to David himself." Today it is fairly common for evangelical scholarship to see the Psalms as essentially historical and to follow Rashi's view that Psalm 2 addresses David or the Davidic king." Ref-1272, p. 124. "Rashi, in an attempt to avoid the apparent deity of the child [in Isa. 9:6], understands the title as follows: "The Holy One, blessed be He, Who gives wondrous counsel, is a mighty God and an everlasting Father, called Hezekiah's name, 'the prince of peace.'" To accomplish this interpretation, Rashi must take God as the subject of the third person singular verb "he called," although it is more likely that it is an indefinite personal subject ("one calls"). As a result of Rashi's identification of God as the subject of the verb, the divine titles do not describe the Messiah but God Himself, thereby avoiding the Christian idea of a divine Messiah. . . . Rashi breaks with the midrashic idea that the verse speaks of the Messiah and rather identifies the child with Hezekiah." Ref-1272, pp. 124-125. "Isaiah 42:1-9 is yet another example of shifting interpretation because of Rashi's influence. This passage, the first of the famous Servant Songs, was recognized as messianic in the ancient Targum Jonathan, paraphrasing it as "Behold, my servant, the Messiah, whom I bring, my chosen one, in whom one delights." . . . Rashi, however, rejects the messianic interpretation of Isa 42:1 and instead identifies collective Israel as the historical referent." Ref-1272, pp. 125-126. ". . . the Midrash . . . asks [concerning Zec. 6:12], "What is the name of the Messiah?" Then, after giving various names from differing Old Testament texts, it says, "His name is 'Branch' as it is stated, 'Behold, a man whose name is Branch, and who shall branch forth from his place, and build the Temple of the Lord' (Zec. 6:12)." Rashi rejects the messianic interpretation and opts for a historical one, writing concerning the Branch, 'He is Zerubbabel, mentioned above (3:8) . . . Remarkably, Rashi is arguing that his view reflects the peshat, the simple meaning of the text, although Zerubbabel is nowhere to be found in this text." Ref-1272, p. 127. "The point of this discussion of the importance of Rashi and medieval Jewish interpreters has been to show that their anti-Christian polemic has subtly crept into Christian interpretation of the Old Testament. This is a result of Rashi's shift in the use of peshat from the literal/literary meaning to the historical sense." Ref-1272, p. 128.

According to Numbers 19, from which this commandment came, the only way to be cleansed from corpse impurity (including the case of unknown homicide, Deuteronomy 21:1-9) is to be sprinkled with water containing the ashes of a Red Heifer, and this water has to be handled by someone who is ceremonially clean." The common element . . . is the idea of 'end' or 'termination.' Even the seemingly remote meaning of כָּרַךְ as 'reed' or more probably 'marsh' is nicely understood as that which was customarily found at the end or edge of the water. This is why כָּרַךְ did not refer to a particular water plant but to the marsh area in general, which was ordinarily composed of a variety of weeds." Joel D. McQuitty, "The Location and Nature of the Red Sea Crossing" (Th.M. thesis, Capital Bible Seminary, Lanham, Md., May 6, 1986) 138, cited by R. Larry Overstreet, "Exegetical and Contextual Facets of Israel's Red Sea Crossing", Ref-0164, 14/1 (2003):63-86(84). The term Red Sea "consistently refers to the Red Sea and to larger bodies of water with which it connects -- the Gulf of Aqaba, the Persian Gulf, and the Arabian Sea." R. Larry Overstreet, "Exegetical and Contextual Facets of Israel's Red Sea Crossing", Ref-0164, 14/1 (2003):63-86(86). "While yam suph is used in the Bible for both the Gulf of Aqaba (Ex 23:31; Nu 21:4; Dt 1:40, 2:1; 1 Kgs 9:26) and the Gulf of Suez (Nu 33:10-11), place names in the Exodus account do not fit the region around either body of water. Instead, a literal and careful understanding of the Biblical text suggests another location." - 2005093001.htm

 "The "Red Sea" phrase came into the account with the third century B.C. translation of the Old Testament into Greek. Called the Septuagint (abbreviated LXX) its translators made yam suph ("Sea of Reeds") into eruthra thalassē ("Red Sea"). The Latin Vulgate followed their lead with marī Rubro ("red Sea") and most English versions continued that tradition. . . . In classical Greek, the name Red Sea was used for both gulfs as well as the main body of the Red Sea, the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean (Kitchen 2003:262-63; Hoffmeier 1997:200). Unfortunately, today we do not know why these bodies of water were originally called "Red Sea" (Hoffmeier 1997:206). One interesting suggestion has a Biblical basis. Maybe the Red Sea received its name from the Edomites, perennial Old Testament enemies of the Israelites. The Edomites, whose name means "red" in Hebrew, controlled the Gulf of Aqaba during much of the Old Testament period. It has been suggested that later Israelites had difficulty referring to this sea by the name of their enemy (that is, the Edomite Sea), so they used the meaning of Edom ("red," Greek eruthra) instead of identify it (Hoffmeier 1997:206)." Gary A. Byers, "New Evidence from Egypt on the Location of the Exodus Sea Crossing, Part 1", Ref-0066, 19.1 2006, 14:22, p. 14. "In the Bible, the name yam suph is used in reference to the Gulf of Aqaba (Ex. 23:31; Num. 21:4; Deu. 1:40; 2:1; 1K. 9:26) and apparently the Gulf of Suez (Num. 33:10-11). That makes both legitimate candidates for the sea crossing location." Gary A. Byers, "New Evidence from Egypt on the Location of the Exodus Sea Crossing, Part 1", Ref-0066, 19.1 2006, 14:22, p. 16. "All 21 verses in which the LXX translates yam suph as "Red Sea" (Ex. 10:19; 13:18; 15:4,22; 23:31; Nu. 14:25; 21:4; 33:10,11; Deu. 1:40; 2:2; 11:4; Jos. 2:10; 4:23; 24:6; Ne. 9:9; Ps. 106:7,9,22; 136:13,15 [Ps. 135:13,15 in LXX]) refer to the miraculous crossing, either directly or as a general theme. . . . Both verses in which the LXX translates yam suph as something other than "Red Sea" (1K. 9:26; Jer. 49:21) refer geographically to the Gulf of Aqaba and thematically not to the miraculous crossing. . . . One yam suph verse remains. For Judges 11:16 the renderings split between two codices, or ancient versions, of the LXX--Alexandrinus and Vaticanus. Alexandrinus renders yam suph as tha'lassa erythra, 'Red Sea,' as with the 21 verses listed earlier; Vaticanus, however, renders yam suph as tha'lassa Siph, "Siph Sea," wherein Siph is a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew sufh. . . . Stated simply, we need to understand how the Jewish translators of the LXX came to render the Hebrew (yam suph) as "Red Sea," instead of its literal meaning, "Sea of Reeds." An equally important question must also be answered in relationship to these concerns: In Acts 7:36 and Hebrews 11:29 the NT authors, under the inspiration of the Spirit, record that the place of the crossing of the Hebrews was the Red Sea. It is generally agreed among scholars that these NT writers (and Stephen, as the speaker in Acts 7) were using the text of the LXX . . . In quoting the LXX, did the NT writers validate, through divine inspiration, the rendering "Red Sea," even if it is an erroneous translation of yam suph? . . . Is there some way we can understand that both "Red Sea" and "Red Sea" translations are from the Lord, and are valid for our understanding and instruction? (This was Jerome's begrudging conclusion . . . as well as Augustine's.)" Scott Lanser and Erich D. Schwartz, "The Red Sea in the NT", Ref-0066, 21.1 2008, 3:11, pp. 4-6. "Jerome postulated that sufh while meaning 'red,' might also mean 'reed.' In short, Jerome thought that yam suph could apply both to the Red Sea and the Reed Sea through which the Israelites passed (Hoffmeier 1997: 207)." Scott Lanser and Erich D. Schwartz, "The Red Sea in the NT", Ref-0066, 21.1 2008, 3:11, p. 7. "Josephus, a contemporary of the NT writers, wrote of the Red Sea and echoed the LXX writers in affirming that the Israelites' miraculous crossing was at the Red Sea. . . . Our earliest extant use of the "Red Sea," where the two words are combined in one term, is in Herodotus, the great Greek historian from the fifth century BC. His phrase, "that which is called the Erythraian Sea" (basically the same term as erythra' tha'lassa, "Red Sea") (predated him. Moreover, his Red or Erythraian Sea differed from ours, and needs to be understood as part of his greater picture of world geography. . . . Herodotus often used "southern sea" and "Red Sea" interchangeably. . . . Both were represented as the great sea that met the Atlantic in the west . . . and from which extended the Arabian and Persian Gulfs. . . . So the ancient Red Sea extended far beyond its modern designation, and what was once called the Arabian Gulf of the Red Sea (Josephus's "Egyptian Bay of the Red Sea") is now the entire Red Sea. . . ." Scott Lanser and Erich D. Schwartz, "The Red Sea in the NT", Ref-0066, 21.1 2008, 3:11, p. 8. "Here [Acts 7:36, Heb. 11:29], under the New Covenant, the Red Sea crossing has now become the Red Sea crossing--that great and mighty spiritual sea that undergirds the world would now become a testimony to the saving power of God for the world. . . . It would point us to Christ, Who would pour out His life-giving blood, that whosoever will may come, and wash, and be made white as snow. Jesus indeed is our erythra' tha'lassa, which washes away our sins and leads us on to spiritual victory. It is not by accident that the Holy Spirit chose to transform the language of this text." "The book of Judges appears to have been written (or undergone final editing) not during the time of the events in the book but sometime after the fall of the Davidic dynasty and the captivity. This is evident from the time notation in Judge 18:30. There it says that the pagan priesthood begun by Moses' grandson Jonathan continued "until the time of the exile from the land." Thiele . . . while claiming to have defended the reliability of the Hebrew Text will be shown to have again and again applied these often mishandled Assyrian data in violation of the clear Hebrew history. In so doing, he created problems with and greatly undermined the integrity of the Hebrew Text." Ref-0186, p. iv. ". . . Thiele's "dual dating" concept violates Scripture and is thoroughly erroneous." Ref-0186, p. 14. "The frustration for this author is that having so said, Thiele did not do that which he stated. He did not honor the Hebrew Scriptures. He did not even come close. A careful study of his labors reveals that his faith and loyalty were totally to the Assyrian Eponym List . . . When the Hebrew Text did not directly fit into the Assyrian chronological scheme, it was contorted and disfigured until it apparently conformed." Ref-0186, p. 119. "For Thiele, and those who have followed in his footsteps, this conclusively proved "the regal years of Solomon were figured from Tishri-to-Tishri" and his entire system was based upon this as an established fact. . . . Dr. Thiele has been shown to have failed to establish his point for if it cannot be proven that inclusive numbering must be applied to the Temple construction, there is no irrefutable proof that Solomon used the Tishri procedure. Moreover, the mathematics simply do not demand a Tishri-to-Tishri calendar for the ascendancy of Solomon to the throne." Ref-0186, p. 125. "Dr. Thiele's frame of reference with regard to the infallible nature of Scripture vis-a-vis the absolute certainty with which he viewed the Assyrian/Babylonian records brought him to conclude that somehow the Hebrew Text has to be forced to conform to the secular. He could do no other." Ref-0186, p. 130. "The problem with biblical chronology is that it does not fit with our current understanding of Assyrian chronology. The biblical chronology is too long by about 40 to 50 years, depending on who you read. The latest reconstruction by Thiele is but one of many attempts in the last 100 years to adjust the biblical account to match the current conjectured chronology of the Assyrians. Thiele very creatively manipulated the biblical data to eliminate about 40 years of history. He did this by constructing viceroy relationships to collapse the length of a king's reign by overlapping it with the king's predecessor. He was the first person we know of to make such a detailed reconstruction of the divided kingdom using this approach." Larry Pierce, "Appendix D: Evidentialism - The Bible and Assyrian Chronology", Ref-0222, p. D:27. [2008060101.pdf] "There are many more problems with Thiele's chronology (and McFall's amendments) which space does not permit us to deal with. How much time should be wasted refuting a defective system? Until we get good biblical answers for the 24 year vice-regency of Uzziah and the 12-year overlap of Pekah with the other kings of Israel, not to mention the many conflicts introduced by these changes, we should not surrender the older, longer chronology of the Bible. Since most historians for the Egyptian period have blindly accepted Thiele's dates, they are labouring under a 40 to 50 year error when they try to align Egyptian history with biblical history." Larry Pierce, "Appendix D: Evidentialism - The Bible and Assyrian Chronology", Ref-0222, p. D:32. [2008060101.pdf] "The purpose of this article is twofold. First, Thiele's system is in need of modification. This study suggests modification of Thiele's system in four major and nine minor ways." Leslie McFall, A Translation Guide to the Chronological Data in Kings and Chronicles, Ref-0200 Volume 148 Number 589 Jan-Mar 1991, 3:45, p. 4. "If Thiele has displayed any weakness which has directly affected his scheme, it is his conviction that some of the Hebrew numbers have not been faithfully transmitted." Leslie McFall, A Translation Guide to the Chronological Data in Kings and Chronicles, Ref-0200 Volume 148 Number 4 Jan-Mar 1991, 3:45, p. 44. "Ezekiel's texts show that non-accession years are to be used for Zedekiah, contrary to the assumption of Thiele and McFall that Zedekiah's years are given by accession counting." Rodger C. Young, "Evidence for Inerrancy from an Unexpected Source: OT Chronology", Ref-0066, Vol. 21 No. 2 Spring 2008, 54:64, p. 60. "In order "to force-fit the biblical data into the mould of secular chronology" Thiele, whose book The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings has been recognised, by many, as a classic, comes up with some ridiculous ideas such as Azariah (Uzziah) coming to the throne when he was 16 years of age; but he had already been a viceroy for 24 years so therefore he was 'miraculously' performing his duties as a viceroy 8 years before he was born. To overcome this problem, Thiele, McFall and others say the text is incorrect and that it should read "in the 3rd year of Jeroboam", not the 27th. This is one way to get rid of the interregnum in Judah as mentioned above. In a copy of the 1983 edition of Thiele's book (the book has been published three times with major revisions between each printing, according to Pierce), on page 129 it refers to Pekah, who "began his twenty years in 752 as a rival of Menahem, who also began that year". Both Thiele and McFall say that Pekah was a rival king in a different place (Gilead) to both Mehaahem and Pekahiah. However, this is impossible if Pekah was Pekahiah's captain in his army (2 Kings 15:25)." David Austin, "Synchronization of the divided kingdoms of Judah and Israel", Ref-0784, 25(2) 2011, 67-73, p. 68.

Klassen took the twenty-year period of 1S. 7:2 out of its immediate context and made it refer to the interval of time from when the Ark was sent to the house of Abinidab until David sent for it after becoming King (2S. 6; 1Chr. 13; 15:12-15). . . . This error in judgment significantly flaws his undertaking over this entire interval. One clear example may be seen on his sketch depicting Samuel's life on page 33. Due to the above mentioned error, Klassen is forced to show him to be approximately thirty-eight years of age . . . around the year that 1S. 8:1 describes Samuel as being "old" and having two grown sons who were serving as judges; thus both in all likelihood were at least thirty years old. . . . Despite its many strong points, it unfortunately contains a fatal flaw with respect to the period of the disruption of the Monarchy. This defect which relates to King Hoshea is to be found on the 41st page of his book. The problem is that 2K. 17:1 states: "In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began Hoshea the son of Elah to reign in Samaria over Israel nine years". Unfortunately, Klassen has made it twelve years to the end of Hoshea's reign rather than to the beginning as the Scripture indicates. The result is that he has the reign of Ahaz beginning in B.C. 732 and Hoshea's commencing in 729, a difference of only three years. . . . The only other questionable decision in this period worthy of comment is on page 40. There, without Biblical direction, he used the date of Uzziah's birth from which to fix the regnal dates of other sovereigns whereas in all other cases he measured from the beginning of the various kings' reigns.
- However this latter is a judgment problem while the 2K. 17:1-4 case is an actual Scripture violation. The net result of these to instances is that the date for the death of Solomon and the ensuing Schism of the kingdom is 29 years too recent as well as all the dates of the events anterior to that happening." regeneration - follows faith : ☪ "In line with something I read in Van Til once I developed the following aphorism: It is not that the sinner won't come to God because he cannot; but he cannot come to Christ because he will not. What this approach does is condense the Bible's teaching on human responsibility while showing how God can justly elect some while leaving others to their rightful condemnation. If we reverse this aphorism and start teaching a sinner won't come to God because he cannot come to God, then we are in the soup. For then we must import once more the mantra that "regeneration precedes faith." This teaching, which is highly questionable on a number of fronts (e.g. 1. no passage says it; 2. some passages strongly imply just the opposite; 3. this would cause a theological difficulty with God giving eternal life (regeneration) to a sinner before he has been justified and declared righteous? even a logical order creates a contradiction between God's thoughts and God's Words)." Paul Henebury, Dispensationalism and TULIP? Unconditional Election, [<http://dreluctant.wordpress.com/2011/03/31/dispensationalism-and-tulip-unconditional-election/>] accessed 20110406.

regeneration - vs. conversion : Eph. 1:13 ☪ "Shedd. . . cites the following contracts: 'Regeneration, accordingly, is an act; conversion is an activity, or a process. Regeneration is the origination of life; conversion is the evolution and manifestation of life. Regeneration is wholly an act of God; conversion is wholly an activity of man. Regeneration is a cause; conversion is an effect. Regeneration is instantaneous; conversion is continuous.'" Ref-0019, p. 130. ". . . the central thought of the doctrine of regeneration is that eternal life is imparted. Regeneration meets the need created by the presence of spiritual death.'" Ref-0019, p. 131. "does the Spirit seal believers after they believe the gospel or when they believe? . . . Although it is certainly possible to translate this last text [Eph. 1:13] as 'after hearing. . . after believing you were sealed,' both the grammatical possibility of contemporaneity and the overall context lead me to believe that the aorist participle is contemporaneous here. Contextually, the threefold praise to the Godhead is in the first two instances due to God's prior action (election, redemption). To be consistent, it should be this way for the third leg (in the least, sealing should not follow believing). Further, in the following context (Eph. 2:1-10), this theme of God's saving grace is given greater articulation. The metaphor of death in that passage as the state from which the elect were delivered gives no confidence that conversion precedes regeneration.'" Ref-0129, p. 625.

replacement theology - anti-Semitic : ☩ +

"In fact, replacement theology and its corollary -- the Church's self-understanding as the true Israel -- are historically linked with overt contempt for Israel. This is evident both in the Adversus Judaeos tradition and in the anti-Semitic thought and practice of Post-Reformation Europe." Ref-0685, p. 134. "It is now generally realized that part of what made both the pogroms of Russia and the Shoah played out in Central Europe possible was an attitude of theological contempt toward Israel that had its foundation in "replacement theology." Such theological thinking and the contempt it produced were components of the Christian tradition as early as the second century. Jaroslav Pelikan observes that, "Virtually every major Christian writer of the first five centuries either composed a treatise in opposition to Judaism or made this issue a dominant theme in a treatise devoted to some other subject." Ref-0685, p. 178. "It is now widely recognized that theological prejudice and anti-Judaic legislation paved the way for the Jewish massacres which have stained the recent history of so-called "Christian" Europe." Ref-0685, p. 179. ". . . as our study will unquestionably prove, the wrong perception of Israel and the Jews by Christians, biblically-speaking, has produced consequences of horrific proportions during the history of the Christian Church in all its strands. Such a shameful legacy, perpetuated during the illustrious Reformation and onwards, is still prevalent in substantial degrees in many Calvinist, Reformed, and Sovereign Grace environments." Ref-1263, p. xix. "A supercessionist theology produces an anti-Judaic demeanor with regard to the Jews, and church history is the terrible, unavoidable proof that this is so." Ref-1263, p. 100

replacement theology - Augustine : Ps. 114:3

☩ "Augustine commented on Ps 114:3, For if we hold with a firm heart the grace of God which hath been given us, we are Israel, the seed of Abraham. . . . Let therefore no Christian consider himself alien to the name of Israel. . . . The Christian people then is rather Israel. . . . But that multitude of Jews, which was deservedly reprobated for its perfidy, for the pleasures of the flesh sold their birthright, so that they belonged not to Jacob, but rather to Esau. [Augustine, Expositions on the Book of Psalms by Saint Augustine, Vol. 5 (Oxford: John Henry Parker, 1853), 114.3] . . . Hence, Augustine's eschatology regarding Israel, as having played out over centuries of church history, is not something that any Christian ought to boast in thoughtlessly. This legacy is certainly unbiblical in its exegetical, theological and ethical outworking, and thus is un-Pauline." Ref-1263, pp. 5-6.

replacement theology - Boettner : ☩ + “[Lorraine Boettner’s] book, The Millennium . . . contains not only the most emphatic and categorical expressions of supersessionism, but also declarations on the destiny of the Jews that reflect theological anti-Judaism. . . . After the Jews had forfeited their rights as a chosen nation, or, to put it more accurately, after God had completed His purpose for the Jews as a separate people, they continued to have the privileges of full and free salvation individually. [L. Boettner, The Millennium (Philadelphia: Presbyterian and Reformed, 1958), 312.] Ref-1263, p. 41 “Arnold Fruchtenbaum, a Jewish Christian, rightly expresses his distress: According to Boettner, the Jews are totally to blame for their history of persecution. The problem is not with the Gentiles’ attitude toward the Jews, but with the Jews failure to disappear. The solution is that the Jews should cease to be Jews, and by so doing will make a great contribution to the world. It is the Jewish failure to assimilate that has produced tragic results, both for the Jews and “for the world at large.” This is theological anti-Semitism with a vengeance! Ref-1263, p. 42 “Boettner’s contemptible attitude is further evidenced as follows: . . . The mere fact that these people are Jews does not in itself give them any more moral or legal right to Palestine than to the United States or any other part of the world. [Boettner, The Millennium, 314] Ref-1263, pp. 42-43 replacement theology - Calvin : Rom. 11:2 ☩ “Like Augustine, Calvin taught that the Christian Church had become the new spiritual Israel, the amalgam of Jew and Gentile, whereby past ethnic identity had become null and void. He commented on Rom 11:2, . . . Many understand this of the Jewish people, as though Paul had said, that religion would again be restored among them as before: but I extend the word ‘Israel’ to all the people of God, according to this meaning, ‘When the Gentiles shall come in, the Jews also shall return [as an accumulating remnant] from their defection to the obedience of the faith; and thus shall be completed the salvation of the whole Israel of God, which must be gathered from both . . . [J. Calvin, The Epistle of Paul the Apostle to the Romans (Edinburgh: Calvin Translation Society, 1849), 437] Ref-1263, pp. 6-7.

replacement theology - church fathers : ☩ + “Thus, as we have seen, churchmen such as Ambrose of Milan, Cyril of Alexandria, John Chrysostom of Antioch, Augustine of Hippo, and Pope Gregory the Great all regarded replacement theology as fact.” Ref-0685, p. 115. “Parkes considers that Justin, Tertullian, Hippolytus, Cyprian, and Origen deserve special mention at this juncture, that is, prior to the infamous fourth century: They thus represent not only geographically but also in their trainings an astonishingly varied range of interests. Their different writings are of capital importance for the development throughout the Church of the absolute condemnation of the Jews which is characteristic of the patristic literature as a whole. [Parkes, The Conflict of the Church and Synagogue (New York: Atheneum, 1969), 100.] Ref-1263, pp. 19-20.

replacement theology - Cranfield : Rom. 9:1; Rom. 10:1; Rom. 11:1 ☩ + “These three chapters emphatically forbid us to speak of the Church as having once and for all taken the place of the Jewish people. . . . And I confess with shame to having also myself used in print on more than one occasion this language of the replacement of Israel by the Church.” C. E. B. Cranfield, A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clarke, 1979), 2:448 cited by Ref-0057, May/June 2007, p. 21. “[C. E. B. Cranfield . . . wrote in his commentary concerning Romans 9-11, It is only where the church persists in refusing to learn this message [of Romans 9-11], where it secretly--perhaps unconsciously--believes that its own existence is based on human achievement, and so fails to understand God’s mercy to itself, that it is unable to believe in God’s mercy for still unbelieving Israel, and so entertains the ugly and unscriptural notion that God has cast off His people Israel and simply replaced it by the Christian Church. These three chapters emphatically forbid us to speak of the Church as having once and for all taken the place of the Jewish people. [C. E. B. Cranfield, The Epistle to the Romans, ICC [Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1979], 448, n. 2).] Ref-1263, pp. xx-xxi.

replacement theology - Cyprian : ☩ + “The logical place to begin this survey is with Cyprian’s explicit statement of replacement theology in his introduction to his work Three Books of Testimonies Against the Jews. He writes, “I have endeavored to show that the Jews, according to what had before been foretold, had departed from God, and had list God’s favor, which has been given them in past time, and had been promised them for the future; while the Christians had succeeded to their place, deserving well of the Lord by faith, and coming out of all nations and from the whole world.” . . . It is significant that the ninth, tenth, and eleventh chapters of Romans are virtually ignored in the Three Books of Testimonies Against the Jews. In particular, no part of these chapters is quoted in which reference is made to the present status or future prospect of unbelieving Israel. The choice to ignore these passages shows that Cyprian’s conviction that Israel has irretrievably lost what had been given them in past time and what had been promised them for the future was based on selective use of Scripture.” Ref-0685, pp. 120, 122.

replacement theology - Eusebius : ☩ + “. . . Eusebius, a follower of Origen . . . also believed that the Church was the “new Israel” that replaced the Jews.” Ref-1263, p. 20.

replacement theology - Justin Martyr : ☩ +
 “The true spiritual Israel, and descendants of Judah, Jacob, Isaac, and Abraham . . . are we who have been led to God through this crucified Christ. That erroneous statement was written by a Christian who addressed himself to a Jewish man as they debated about Christianity. He later added, “We who have been quarried out from the bowels of Christ are the true Israelitic race.” The debate occurred almost 1,900 years ago (A.D. 155) between Justin Martyr and his Jewish opponent, Trypho.” William L. Krewson, The Roots of Replacement Theology, Ref-0057, May/June 2007, p. 19. “Around A.D. 150,, [Justin Martyr] became the first Christian writer to explicitly identify the church as “Israel.” He declared, “For the true spiritual Israel, and descendants of Judah, Jacob, Isaac, and Abraham . . . are we who have been led to God through this crucified Christ.” He also said, “Since then God blesses this people [i.e., Christians], and calls them Israel, and declares them to be His inheritance, how is that you [Jews] repent not of the deception you practise on yourselves, as if you alone were Israel?” Justin also announced, “We, who have been quarried out from the bowels of Christ, are the true Israelite race.” Michael J. Vlach, “Rejection Then Hope: The Church’s Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era”, Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, pp. 57-48. “Justin Martyr reapplied OT promises so that the church, not Israel, was viewed as the beneficiary of its promised blessings. Justin declared to Trypho: And along with Abraham we [Christians] shall inherit the holy land, when we shall receive the inheritance for an endless eternity, being children of Abraham through the like faith. . . . Accordingly, He promises to him a nation of similar faith, God fearing, righteous. . . . but it is not you, “in whom is no faith.”” Michael J. Vlach, “Rejection Then Hope: The Church’s Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era”, Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, p. 61.

replacement theology - Origen : “Origen also taught that the church was the new Israel. In his debate with Celcus, for example, Origen stated, “Our Lord, seeing the conduct of the Jews not to be at all in keeping with the teaching of the prophets, inculcated by a parable that the kingdom of God would be taken from them, and given to the converts from heathenism.” N. R. M. De Lange summarizes Origen’s supersessionist perspective: “Crucial to the whole argument [of Origen] is the paradox that Jews and Gentiles suffer a reversal of roles. The historical Israelites cease to be Israelites, while the believers from the Gentiles become the New Israel. This involves a redefinition of Israel.” . . . In line with supersessionist theology, Augustine explicitly stated that the title “Israel” belonged to the Christian church: “For if we hold with a firm heart the grace of God which hath been given us, we are Israel, the seed of Abraham . . . Let therefore no Christian consider himself alien to the name of Israel.” He also said, “The Christian people then is rather Israel.”” Michael J. Vlach, “Rejection Then Hope: The Church’s Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era”, Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, pp. 57-48.

replacement theology - Presbyterian : ☩ +
 “The Presbyterian “Church” USA has called the Palestinian Arabs good and the Israelis evil. As we report in this letter, the Presbyterians, at their annual general assembly this summer [2004], voted 431-62 in favor of joining the divestment campaign against Israel. They are the first Christian denomination to do so. Leaders of this liberal mainline church also approved several other anti-Israel resolutions at their gathering in Richmond, Virginia.” Zola Levitt, “A Note From Zola”, Ref-0182, August, 2004, p. 9.

replacement theology - priesthood : Mal. 1:10-12 ☩ “What emerges from the data we have examined is that the radical transformation of the Christian ministry during the second and third centuries was, to a large extent, the result of the Church taking over the Levitical practice on the assumption that such instruction was intended for the Church. This assumption is a fruit of replacement theology, according to which the Church, and not Israel, is the true subject of the Law and the Prophets." Ref-0685, p. 136. "The disinheriting of Israel did not remain an isolated element in the development of Christian thought. One area of theology that it influenced in the early Christian centuries was ecclesiology. For example, in what became the standard interpretation of Malachi 1:10-12, the idea that the Church had replaced Israel was linked with the reinterpretation of the Lord's Supper in the Levitical terms of sacrifice. Once the Hebrew Bible was thought to be a thoroughly Christian book, there developed a more general use of Levitical forms and terminology in the context of the Church. Instead of being called elders, local church leaders began to be called priests in order to comply with the new concept of the Christian ministry as sacrificial. At the same time important characteristics of the new covenant, such as the priesthood of all believers, the sufficiency of Christ's once-for-all sacrifice, and the crucial importance of faith in Christ for personal salvation were neglected." replacement theology - Roman Catholicism :

☩ + "The belief that Christians have replaced Jews as God's elect remains a part of Christian doctrine to this day. Vatican Council II reaffirmed that 'the Church is the new people of God,' even as it condemned the teaching that the Jews were 'rejected or accursed as if this followed from the Holy Scriptures.'" Ref-0153, p. 108. "Cyril Salim Bustros, the Lebanon-born Greek archbishop of Our Lady of the Annunciation in Boston, Massachusetts was responsible for delivering the final statement. In clarifying remarks, he stated that "the Holy Scriptures cannot be used to justify the return of Jews to Israel and the displacement of the Palestinians, to justify the occupation by Israel of Palestinian lands." He then escalated the situation by declaring that the original promises made by God to the children of Israel "were nullified by Christ. There is no longer a chosen people." Ryan Jones, Catholic Church: Christ Nullified God's Promises to the Jews, Israel Today cited by Bible Prophecy Today (<http://www.bible-prophecy-today.com/2010/10/catholic-church-christ-nullified-gods.html>) accessed 20101024.

replacement theology - supersessionism :

☩ + "Supersessionism takes various forms. The first is "punitive" or "retributive" supersessionism which believes Israel to be rejected by God and replaced by the church because of its disobedience and rejection of Christ. Punitive supersessionism emphasizes Israel's disobedience as the primary reason for Israel's rejection by God. A strong form of punitive supersessionism emphasizes the permanent rejection of Israel while a milder or moderate form of punitive supersessionism is open in some sense to the idea of a future for national Israel. Another variation of supersessionism is "economic supersessionism." . . . economic supersessionism is the view that "carnal Israel's history is providentially ordered from the outset to be taken up onto the spiritual church." With this form of supersessionism, national Israel corresponds to Christ's church in a prefigurative way. Christ, with His advent, "brings about the obsolescence of carnal Israel and inaugurates the age of the spiritual church." . . . Israel is not replaced because of its disobedience but because its role in the history of redemption expired with the coming of Jesus. It is now superseded by the arrival of the new spiritual Israel -- the Christian church. . . . primarily the early church affirmed punitive supersessionism--Israel was viewed as rejected by God and replaced by the church because of the nation's rejection of Christ." "Covenant theologians themselves do not see eye to eye on how the promises to Israel are fulfilled in the church. One group affirms that the Old Testament promises are now being fulfilled by the church on earth. This is Augustinian amillennialism, and it is accepted today by the Roman Catholic church as well as by some Protestant theologians such as Berkhof and Allis. "Jesus predicted that He would die and be raised on the third day (Mtt. 16:21; Mark 8:31; Luke 9:22). . . . Jesus' body was laid in the tomb on the evening of the day of preparation (Friday), the day before the Sabbath (Mtt. 27:62; 28:1; Mark 15:42; Luke 23:54,56; John 19:31,42). The women returned home and rested on the Sabbath (Saturday, Luke 23:56). Early on the first day of the week (Sunday), they went to the tomb (Mtt. 28:1; Mark 16:1-2; Luke 24:1; John 20:1) which was empty. Furthermore, on the same day He arose from the grave, Jesus walked with two disciples on the road to Emmaus (Luke 24:13), and they told Him that their Master was crucified and 'now it is the third day since this occurred' (Luke 24:21). . . . The most frequent reference to Jesus' resurrection is that it occurred on the third day (not the fourth day) (Mtt. 16:21; 17:23; 20:19; 27:64; Luke 9:22; 18:33; 24:7,21,46; Acts 10:40; 1Cor. 15:4). . . . There are four passages (Mtt. 27:63; Mark 8:31; 9:31; 10:34) which speak of Christ's resurrection as occurring 'after three days,' but this is speaking of the same time period as on 'the third day'. . . . The three Markan passages are paralleled by one or two of the other Synoptic Gospels, and in each case the other Synoptic does not use 'after three days' as Mark does but 'on the third day' (Mark 8:31 = Mtt. 16:21/Luke 9:22; Mark 9:31 = Mtt. 17:23; Mark 10:34 = Mtt. 20:19/Luke 18:33)." Ref-0044, pp. 71-72. For OT examples where portions of three days are counted as a full three days, see Ref-0044, p. 73. "Furthermore, Rabbi Eleazar ben Azariah (lived ca. A.D. 100), who was the tenth in the descent from Ezra, stated: 'A day and night are an Onah [?a portion of time] and the portion of an Onah is as the whole of it.'" Jerusalem Talmud: Shabbath ix. 3; cf. also Babylonian Talmud: Pesahim 4a, cited by Ref-0044, p. 74. "Further, in Jewish counting, a part of a day was counted as a whole day (a figure of speech known as synecdoche, for example, 1 Samuel 30:12, where "he had not eaten bread or drunk water for three days and nights" is equivalent in verse 13 with hayyôm shelosha (three days ago), which could only mean the day before yesterday. Another example is 1 Kings 20:29 (NIV): For seven days they camped opposite each other, and on the seventh day the battle was joined. . . . Another proof text is Matthew 27:63-64: . . ." Ref-0232, p. 80. "Jesus is recorded as saying, "The Son of man will rise again after three days" [Mark 8:31], and "He will be raised again on the third day" [Mtt. 16:21] -- expressions that are used interchangeably. This can be seen from the fact that most references to the resurrection state that it occurred on the third day. Also, Jesus spoke of His resurrection in John [John 2:19-22] stating that He would be raised up in three days (not the fourth day). Matthew gives weight to this idiomatic usage [Mtt. 27:63]. After the Pharisees tell Pilate of the prediction of Jesus, "After three days I will rise again," they ask for a guard to secure the tomb until the third day. If the phrase, "after three days," had not been interchangeable with the "third day," the Pharisees would have asked for a guard for the fourth day. . . . The Jewish writers have recorded in their

commentaries on the Scriptures the principle governing the reckoning of time. Any part of a period was considered a full period. Any part of a day was reckoned as a complete day. The Babylonian Talmud (Jewish commentaries) relates that, "The portion of a day is as the whole of it" (Mishnah, Third Tractate, "B. Pesachim," p. 4a.). The Jerusalem Talmud . . . says, "We have a teaching, ?A day and a night are an Onah and the portion of an Onah is as the whole of it" (Mishnah, Tractate "J. Shabbath," Chapter IX, par. 3.)" If the first resurrection is spiritual, then so is the second, which I suppose none will be hardy enough to maintain: but if the second is literal, then so is the first, which in common with the whole primitive Church and many of the best modern expositors, I do maintain, and receive as an article of faith and hope." Alford, Henry. New Testament for English Readers. . . . the Didachist grounds his point about the bodily resurrection at the second advent in a prophecy from Zech 14:5. And then the signs of the truth will appear: [the] first sign [will be] an opening in heaven, then [the] sign of a trumpet sound, and the third [sign will be] a resurrection of dead ones -- but not of all [the dead]. . . . but as it was said: . . . "The Lord will come and all the holy ones with him." . . . The Didachist does not envision Scripture teaching a future "general" resurrection, but one that consists of believers only . . . He believes this to be consistent with the prophecy in Zech 14:5 about "the holy ones" who will accompany the Lord when he will come." William Varner, "The Didache's Use of the Old and New Testaments", Ref-0164, Vol. 16 No. 1, (Spring 2005), 127:151, p. 140. Regarding the view that the first resurrection (Rev. 20:4) is spiritual: "If this verse refers to the new birth, then the martyrs were beheaded before they were born again" (MacLeod, 2000: 57). This interpretation introduces "the absurdity of having souls being regenerated after they had been beheaded for their faithfulness to Christ!" (McClain 1974: 488)." Ref-0697, p. 38. If Paul taught that all men would be resurrected (Acts 24:14-15), why then would he seek to attain to the resurrection from the dead (Php. 3:10-11). The first four stages would all be included in [the category of] the first resurrection or resurrection to life, inasmuch as all receive eternal life and the last would be the second resurrection, or the resurrection unto damnation, inasmuch as all receive eternal judgment at that time." Ref-0050, p. 411. See Order of Resurrection under Revelation 20:5 in A Testimony of Jesus Christ - Volume 2 for a more detailed presentation. "Some [intertestamental Jews] seem to have expected the final judgment to precede the arrival of the messianic kingdom and the righteous to be raised to share in it forever [1 Enoch 83-90 ("The Dream Visions"); Testament of Judah 25; Testament of Zebulun 10; and Testament of Benjamin 10:4-10--but some of these may be Christian alterations or additions to Jewish books!] In other writings, such as 1 Enoch 91-104, the judgment comes at the close of the kingdom; the righteous are not raised to share it, but later enjoy a blessed immortality. Second Baruch 50:4 also seems to allude to a judgment after the conclusion of the kingdom, and 2 Esdras speaks of it in even more detail." Ref-1200, p. 293.

resurrection - physical : Job 19:26; Acts 26:8; Rom. 8:23; 2Cor. 4:14; Rev. 20:4 ☪ "The interpretation that Rev. 20:4 refers to a bodily resurrection for deceased Tribulation saints is the best view for the following reasons. First, the verb ζάω, which occurs twelve times in Revelation (1:18; 2:8; 3:1; 4:9-10; 7:2; 10:6; 13:14; 15:7; 19:20; 20:4-5), normally refers to eternal (4:9-10) or physical life (2:8; 19:20). When it refers to a local church coming to life, like Sardis in 3:1, the context clarifies that ζάω is being used figuratively. Second since ζάω refers to the physical resurrection of unbelievers in 20:5, its previous usage in verse 4 also refers to a literal resurrection. Third, in contexts that refer to resurrection ζάω is normally an ingressive aorist (Luke 15:52; Rom. 14:9; Rev. 2:8; 13:14) and is translated "they came to life." Fourth, since the saints' resurrection is contrasted with their physical death by beheading (20:4), their resurrection will be physical. Fifth, in verse 5 John used the noun ἀνάστασις, "resurrection," to refer to physical resurrection. Elsewhere, John used this word in John 5:29 and 11:24-25. In both cases Jesus referred to people who would physically come out from their tombs." Reuben - birthright lost : birthright - Reuben lost★; Gen. 49:3 ❖ "Actually Reuben had the right of the firstborn. Nevertheless the Messiah is not 'Lion out of the tribe of Reuben.' For, on account of sin (as recorded in Gen. 35:22), Reuben was deprived of his firstborn rights and the right concerning the Messiah (1Chr. 5:1; Gen. 49:3-4). The next following brothers, Simeon and Levi, were also excluded (Gen. 49:5-7) on account of their bloody deed at Shechem (Gen. 34:25). Thereupon Reuben's rights as the firstborn were divided as follows: The double share of the material inheritance (Deu. 21:15-17) went to Joseph (in Ephraim and Manasseh; 1Chr. 5:1-2); The priestly dignity (see Ex. 13:2,15), having regard to Ex. 32:26-28, went to Levi (Num. 3:12,45; 8:17-18); and The ruler's dignity (Gen. 43; 33; 48:14,18,19) went to Judah, Jacob's fourth son (1Chr. 5:2). Therefore is the Messiah the 'Lion out of the tribe of Judah' (Rev. 5:5; Gen. 49:9-10)." Ref-0197, p. 157.

Revelation - book of - apostolic authorship - against : ☉ + "Among the more serious arguments against an apostolic authorship are the following: (1) The author claims to be a 'prophet' and not an 'apostle.' (2) The author names himself, contrary to John's writings. (3) There are no allusions to incidents in the Gospel and no claim to have known Christ personally. (4) There seem to be several uncharacteristic emphases if by the apostle, e.g., God as Majestic Creator (instead of Compassionate Father), Christ as Conqueror (instead of Redeemer), a seven-foldness to the Holy Spirit (rather than unity) [but see Isa. 11:2]. (5) There is a different range of thought, i.e. an omission of characteristically Johannine ideas such as life, light, truth, grace, and love. (6) Linguistic style. (7) Doubt as to apostolic authorship among the Eastern churches. All of these and more are ably answered in the introductions and commentators to be cited next. . . B.B. Revelation - book of - author : Rev. 1:1 ☉ "In the earliest references to Revelation, church fathers testified that the author was the apostle John. . . Such was the belief of Justin Martyr (ca. A.D. 100-165). . . Irenaeus (120-202). . . Tertullian (150-225)." Ref-0123, p. 24. " . . . Clement and Origen both accepted the book of Revelation as the inspired work of the apostle John." Ref-0123, p. 27. "Dionysius attempted to prove this theory [that John did not write Revelation] by pointing out vocabulary, grammatical, and stylistic differences between the book of Revelation and the gospel of John. . . Dionysius' objections have been ably answered by many Bible scholars and linguists [see footnote 42]." Ref-0123, p. 29. "Eusebius followed Dionysius in suggesting that the author of Revelation was not the apostle John, but a 'presbyter

John' mentioned by Papias. But more than one commentator has suggested that the two proposed Johns were one and the same." Ref-0123, p. 30. "As for the authorship of the Apocalypse, Calvin suggested John Mark as a good candidate." Ref-0123, p. 34.

Revelation - book of - date written : Rev. 1:1 ☉ "Early Church father Irenaeus (A.D. 120-202) made a statement about the date of Revelation. Writing around A.D. 180 Irenaeus said the following: 'We will not, however, incur the risk of pronouncing positively as to the name of Antichrist; for if it were necessary that his name should be distinctly revealed in this present time, it would have been announced by him who beheld the apocalyptic vision. For that was seen not very long time since, but almost in our day, towards the end of Domitian's reign.'" Ref-0055, December 2000, 312, quoting Irenaeus, Against Heresies, v.xxx.3 ". . . even the church historian and amillennialist Philip Schaff admits that only the later dating of the book makes sense from all we know of ecclesiastical history. He says, 'The traditional date of composition at the end of Domitian's reign (95-96) rests on the clear and weighty testimony of Irenaeus, is confirmed by Eusebius and Jerome, and has still its learned defenders.'" Mal Couch, Inerrancy: The Book of Revelation, Ref-0055, August 2001, p. 211. See Ref-0146, pp.310-311. "The fact of his banishment to Patmos is confirmed by the unanimous testimony of antiquity.[591] It is perpetuated in the traditions of the island, which has no other significance. 'John--that is the thought of Patmos; the island belongs to him; it is his sanctuary. Its stones preach of him, and in every heart, he lives.'[592] The time of the exile is uncertain, and depends upon the disputed question of the date of the Apocalypse. External evidence points to the reign of Domitian, a.d. 95; internal evidence to the reign of Nero, or soon after his death, a.d. 68. The prevailing--we may say the only distinct tradition, beginning with so respectable a witness as Irenaeus about 170, assigns the exile to the end of the reign of Domitian, who ruled from 81 to 96.[593] He was the second Roman emperor who persecuted Christianity, and banishment was one of his favorite modes of punishment.[594] Both facts give support to this tradition. After a promising beginning he became as cruel and bloodthirsty as Nero, and surpassed him in hypocrisy and blasphemous self-deification. He began his letters: 'Our Lord and God commands,' and required his subjects to address him so.[595] He ordered gold and silver statues of himself to be placed in the holiest place of the temples. When he seemed most friendly, he was most dangerous. He spared neither senators nor consuls when they fell under his dark suspicion, or stood in the way of his ambition. He searched for the descendants of David and the kinsmen of Jesus, fearing their aspirations, but found that they were poor and innocent persons.[596] Many Christians suffered martyrdom under his reign, on the charge of atheism--among them his own cousin, Flavius Clemens, of consular dignity, who was put to death, and his wife Domitilla, who was banished to the island of Pandateria, near Naples." [597] Ref-0124, 1.7.42. "Irenaeus introduced an opinion that the Apocalypse was written in the time of Domitian; but then he also postponed the writing of some others of the sacred books, and was to place the Apocalypse after them: he might perhaps have heard from his master Polycarp that he had received this book from John about the time of Domitian's death; or induced John might himself at that time have made a new publication of it, from when Irenaeus might imagine it was then but newly written. Eusebius in his Chronicle and Ecclesiastical History follows Irenaeus; but afterwards in his Evangelical Demonstrations, he conjoins the banishment of John into Patmos, with the death of Peter and Paul: and so do Tertullian and Pseudo-Prochorus, as well as the first author, whoever he was, of that very ancient fable, that John was put by Nero into the vessel of hot oil, and coming out unhurt, was banished by him to Patmos. Tho' this story be no more than a fiction, yet was it founded on a tradition of the first Churches, that John was banished into Patmos in the days of Nero. Epiphanius represents the Gospel of John as written in the time of Domitian, and the Apocalypse even before that of Nero. Arethas in the beginning of his Commentary quotes the opinion of Irenaeus from Eusebius, but follows it not: for he afterwards affirms the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and that former commentators had expounded the sixth seal of that destruction. With the opinion of the first Commentators agrees the tradition of the Churches of Syria, preserved to this day in the title of the Syrian Version of the Apocalypse, which title is this: The Revelation which was made to John the Evangelist by God in the Island Patmos, into which he was banished by Nero the Caesar." Ref-0849, pp. 235-237.

Revelation - book of - grammar : Rev. 1:1 ☉ "In a number of places the apostle John departed from basic rules of grammar and syntax in his use of standard Koine Greek. As Swete writes, 'But from whatever cause or concurrence of causes, it cannot be denied that the Apocalypse of John stands alone among Greek literary writings in its disregard of the ordinary rules of syntax. . . . The book seems openly and deliberately to defy the grammarian, and yet, even as literature, it is in its own field unsurpassed.'" Ref-0123, p. 69.

revival - examples : ☉ + "The Western Mail, August 16, under a heading 'Amazing Scenes at Llangeitho', gave their reporter's eye-witness account of what had happened the previous day. People 'from all parts of Wales poured into this little village throughout the night and during the greater part of the day. Many of them slept in the open air'. When it was learned that Dr Lloyd-Jones was to preach, not in the great marquee -- erected on the ground used in the open-air services of two hundred years before -- but in the chapel which could hold no more than 800, there was consternation and confusion: 'An hour and a half before the meeting opened the chapel was crammed and thousands of people surrounded the doors in a frantic effort to get inside. A few went round the back of the chapel where a small door from an ante-room leads on to the pulpit. The outer door of this ante-room was locked, but so eager were the people to gain admission that it was forced open and a rush was made into the building. . . . The situation was, in the words of the Western Mail, 'fast becoming out of hand', when, an hour before the meeting was due to start, it was announced that, after all, the service would be held in the marquee. 'At this stage the people moved in a solid mass along the narrow road towards the field, and the marquee, which is capable of seating 6,000 people, was soon filled to the doors, where hundreds of people stood outside.' The reporter estimated that 7,000 heard the preacher, who spoke for nearly an hour from Acts 2:38, 'Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptised every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.'" Ref-0933, p. 299. "Dr Lloyd-Jones primary difficulty is entering the chapel where he is to preach for, like his Master, the crowds press on him. We know of some of the poor of the valleys keeping back some "dole" money for weeks in order that they might travel to listen to him and throw their mite into the treasury. Yes, returning to empty, bare homes with a song in their hearts. We have seen people standing in the rain outside chapels for two hours in the hope that some word would come to them in his shouts and we heard that one crowd asked permission to break the window so that they could hear him, promising to pay for the damage done." rib - woman taken from man : Gen. 2:21 ☉

 "The periosteum (the literal meaning of this word 'around the bone') is a membrane that covers every bone. . . . The periosteum contains cells that can manufacture new bone. . . . Thoracic (chest) surgeons routinely remove ribs, and these often grow back, in whole or in part. A lot depends on the care which the rib is removed; it needs to be 'peeled' out of its periosteum to leave this membrane as intact as possible." Ref-0028, 21(4) September-November, 1999, 46.

river - of Egypt : Gen. 15:18 ☪ "Some have identified the River of Egypt as being the same as the Brook of Egypt mentioned in other passages. . . the Brook of Egypt and the River of Egypt are not the same. The latter refers to a continuous flowing river, while the former is a wadi, a dry river bed that only has water in it periodically during the rainy season.

The words for river and brook are two different Hebrew words . . . The Brook of Egypt is the modern Wadi-el-Arish running south to north in the central Sinai Peninsula. . . . The River of Egypt . . . refers to one of the 'fingers' of the Nile River. . . . The most eastern branch or finger was the one known as the River of Egypt. . . . In this passage, the southern boundary is given as the River of Egypt, while the passages in the Prophets . . . give the southern boundary as the Brook of Egypt. . . . The difference is simply between the extent of possession and control as over against the extent of actual settlement. In the final restoration of the Land, Israel will possess all the way south to the River of Egypt and will control down to the area of the modern Suez Canal. But as far as where the Jews will be living, the actual boundary of this settlement will only extend as far south as the Brook of Egypt or the modern Wadi-el-Arish." Ref-0219, pp. 428-429.

Roman Catholicism - Apocrypha : ☪ + “[T]he Apocrypha books supported such doctrines as prayers for the dead (2 Macc. 12:44); the expiatory sacrifice (eventually to become the mass, 2 Macc. 12:39-46); alms giving with expiatory value, also leading to deliverance from death (Tobit 12:9; 4:10); invocation and intercession of the saints (2 Macc. 15:14; bar. 3:4); the worship of angels (Tobit 12:12); purgatory; and the redemption of souls after death (2 Macc. 12:42,46).” Ref-0060, p. 173.

Roman Catholicism - apostolic succession : Mtt. 16:18; Mtt. 18:18; Luke 22:24-30; John 21:15-19; Gal. 2:11; 2Ti. 4:16; 1Pe. 5:1-2 ☪ + “First, the Gospels themselves deny that any of the Apostles held a position of primacy. Secondly, the rest of the New Testament shows that Peter did not actually end up taking any supposed position of primacy. In support of the first point, I call our attention to Luke 22:24-30. . . In this passage we are told that even as the disciples walked toward the Garden of Gethsemane on the night of Christ's betrayal, they got into an argument about who among them would be considered the greatest. . . in light of the recurring arguments about who would be the greatest, it does not seem that the disciples understood the words of Matthew 16:18 to establish Peter as the foundation of the Church, the first Pope, the Vicar of Christ on earth. . . Peter, in his own letters, fails to give us the slightest suggestion that he views himself as a Pope, as the head of the Church on earth. [In 1Pe. 5:1-2] Peter does not speak as a Pope, but as a fellow elder. He does not speak as the chief pastor, but as a fellow pastor. . . . When Paul wrote to the Church at Rome in A.D. 55-57, it is plain that Peter was not there. When Paul was in Rome and was writing the prison epistles, he never mentioned Peter. In fact, in one place [2Ti. 4:16], those epistles make it clear that either Peter was not in Rome, or he had actually abandoned Paul! . . . This is seen more clearly in Galatians 2 [Gal. 2:11] in Paul's willingness to directly rebuke Peter's errant behavior at Antioch, when Peter withdrew from table fellowship with the Gentiles.” Ref-0093, pp. 108-111. “This statement [Mtt. 16:18] is followed by the promise to give the keys of the kingdom of heaven to Peter at some time in the future. . . Yet when we see this authority given in Matthew 18:18, it is given not to Peter alone or even primarily to him. It is conferred on all the Apostles, using the exact same language.” . . . if the Roman Catholic interpretation is correct, then when Peter died (ca. A.D. 68), his successor would have been in authority over a living Apostle -- John, who did not die until the end of the first century.” Ref-0791, p. 186.

Roman Catholicism - baptism - children require : ☪ + “In the words of the Trent Catachism: ‘Infants, unless regenerated unto God through the grace of baptism, whether their parents be Christian or infidel, are born to eternal misery and perdition. . . .’ what a contrast with the generally accepted Protestant doctrine that all those dying in infancy, whether baptized or unbaptized, are saved.” Loraine Boettner, Roman Catholicism (Phillipsburg, NJ: The Presbyterian and Reformed Publishing Co., 1962), 190.

Roman Catholicism - baptism - required for salvation : ☪ + “Baptism is an absolute necessity for salvation, for as Canon 5 of the ‘Decree Concerning the Sacraments’ from the Council of Trent says, ‘If anyone says that baptism is optional, that is, not necessary for salvation, let him be anathema.’ And if anyone disagrees with this view of baptism they are condemned by anathema as well (Canon 3).” Ref-0093, p. 129 “Canon 849 Baptism, the gateway to the sacraments, is necessary for salvation, either by actual reception or at least by desire. By it people are freed from sins, are born again as children of God and, made like to Christ by an indelible character, are incorporated in the Church. Roman Catholicism - compromise with : ☼ + "He [Calvin] sometimes found himself at variance with his Protest associates, who seemed to him to be insufficiently on guard against damaging concessions to the Roman negotiators. At Regensburg, where Gasparo Contarini and other Roman Catholic theologians conceded the substance of Luther's doctrine of Justification, the hope of reunion of Lutherans with the Papacy was seriously entertained by some on both sides; but Luther was not there, and Paul III was not committed to the views expressed by his own emissaries. Calvin saw the futility and artificiality of the long-drawn-out discussions and was impatient with Bucer and Melancthon for their resort to 'ambiguous formulae' in order to secure the appearance of agreement." justified is bound ex fide to believe that he is certainly in the number of the predestined, let him be anathema." Canon 17: "If anyone says that the grace of justification is shared by those only who are predestined to life, but that all others who are called are called indeed but receive not grace, as if they are by divine power predestined to evil, let him be anathema." Canon 33: "If anyone says that the Catholic doctrine of justification as set forth by the holy Council in the present decree, derogates in some respect from the glory of God or the merits of our Lord Jesus Christ, and does not rather illustrate the truth of our faith and no less the glory of God and of Christ Jesus, let him be anathema." Roman Catholicism - deuterocanonical : ☼ + Relating to, or being a second canon, especially that consisting of sections of the Old and New Testaments not included in the original Roman Catholic canon but accepted by theologians in 1548 at the Council of Trent. "... the Jerusalem Bible and the New American Bible . . . contain all of the books found in the Jewish Bible and the Protestant Old Testament, and in almost the same sequence as the Protestant Bible. However, the Catholic Old Testament includes additional books found in the Septuagint but not in the Hebrew Bible or the Protestant canon: Tobit, Judith, 1-2 Maccabees, Wisdom (of Solomon), Ecclesiasticus (i.e., Wisdom of Joshua ben Sirach, not to be confused with the Book of Ecclesiastes), and Baruch (with the Epistle of Jeremiah). These additional writings are called deuterocanonical books by the Roman Catholic Church. In printed editions, these books are interspersed within the sequence of the other books of the Old Testament. Moreover, the books of Esther and Daniel contain additional material not found in the Jewish or Protestant Bibles. Six additional chapters are found within Esther; and additional material is found in Daniel 3, with chapters 13 and 14 being discrete stories entitled "Susanna" and "Bel and the Dragon." Books were included in the Roman Catholic Bible not on the basis of the Hebrew canon, but on according to the contents and sequence of the Latin Vulgate. The Vulgate included books translated from the Hebrew and books and material found only in the Greek. . . . The books originally written in Hebrew, however, are now translated from the Hebrew text rather than from the Latin, though often distinctive readings and additional material found only in the Greek or the Vulgate are also included." Roman Catholicism - faith plus works : ☼ + "When the Apostle says that a person is justified by faith and as a gift, those words are to be understood in the sense which the perennial consent of the catholic church has maintained and expressed, namely, that we are said to be justified by faith because faith is the first stage of human salvation, the foundation and root of all justification, without which it is impossible to please God and come to the fellowship of his children." Ref-0165, p. 66. "It is a universally accepted dogma of the Catholic Church that man, in union with the grace of the Holy Spirit must merit heaven by his good works. . . . we can actually merit heaven as our reward. . . . Roman Catholicism - false doctrines : ☼ + "ten false doctrines were introduced into the church: 1. Justification by works -- Not simply by grace through faith; 2. Baptismal regeneration -- That a person is saved by baptism; 3. Worship of images; 4. Celibacy -- Forbidding priests to marry, a further distinction between clergy and laity. 5. Confessionalism -- Where sins are confessed to a priest who then declares absolution of those sins. 6. Purgatory -- A place of confinement which is neither Heaven nor Hell, but a place where one has to be refined before going into Heaven, and so sanctification was not complete at death; 7. Transubstantiation -- The concept of the continual and perpetual sacrifice of Jesus; 8. Indulgences -- Where thought the giving of money, a person's time in purgatory could be reduced; 9. Penance -- Involving the torment of one's body in order to reduce time in purgatory. 10. Mariolatry -- The worship of the virgin Mary, her elevation as the mother of God, and the declaration of her deity." Roman Catholicism - freedom of conscience : ☼ + "Most astonishingly, Vatican II (1962-65), the most recent Roman Catholic council, proclaimed the right of the individual to hold beliefs in accord with personal conscience. In part, it declared: 'This Vatican Council declares that the human person has a right to religious freedom. This freedom means that all men are to be immune from coercion on the part of individuals of social groups and of any human power, in such wise that no one is to be forced to act in a manner contrary to his own beliefs, whether privately or publicly, whether alone or in association with others, within due limits. The council further declares that the right to religious freedom has its foundation in the very dignity of the human person as this dignity is known through the revealed word of God and by reason itself. This right of the human person to religious freedom is to be recognized in the constitutional law whereby society is governed and thus it is to become a civil right.'" Ref-0692, p. 151.

Roman Catholicism - justification uncertain : ☼ + "Roman Catholic scholar Ludwig Ott, in his book Fundamentals of Catholic Dogma, said the following concerning the idea of 'achieving justification': 'The reason for the uncertainty of the state of grace lies in this, that without a special revelation nobody can with certainty of faith know whether or not he has fulfilled all the conditions which are necessary for achieving justification.' Roman Catholicism teaches that the 'grace of justification' can be gained and lost, gained and lost, Trent said: 'Those who through sin have forfeited the received grace of justification can again be justified when, moved by God, they exert themselves to obtain through the sacrament of penance the recovery, by the merits of Christ, of the grace lost. . . Roman Catholicism - Mass - sacrifice : ☩ + "The introduction, "The Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy: Excerpts on the Eucharist" of Vatican II affirmed, "For it is the liturgy through which, especially in the divine sacrifice of the Eucharist, the work of our redemption is accomplished."" Ron J. Bigalke, Jr., The Theory of Sacrifice in the Mass, Ref-0055, Vol. 10 No. 29 May/June 2006, 49:74, p. 52. "The ultimate prayer and the central act of Catholic worship is the Sacrifice of the Mass. Every day throughout the world the Sacrifice of Christ is renewed in the Mass, the sacrifice of the Cross offered in an unbloody manner. The same Victim offered and the same High Priest makes the offering. The Mass both represents the Sacrifice of the Cross and offers the same sacrifice. It is the same death of Christ that is offered and represented. The sacrifice of the Mass is then for Catholics the same as the sacrifice of the Cross: the Victim is the same, the Priest is the same; only the manner is different."" Richard P. McBrien, Catholicism (New York: Harper & Row, 1981), 763 in Ron J. Bigalke, Jr., The Theory of Sacrifice in the Mass, Ref-0055, Vol. 10 No. 29 May/June 2006, 49:74, p. 54.

Roman Catholicism - Papal authority universal : ☩ + "Pope Boniface made this quite clear in the papal bull, Unam Sanctum, promulgated November 18, 1302: 'Consequently we declare, state, define, and pronounce that it is altogether necessary to salvation for every human creature to be subject to the Roman Pontiff.'" Roman Catholicism - Papal infallibility : Gal. 2:11-14 ☩ + "The official declaration of this concept came out of the first Vatican Council that convened in 1870. The idea that the Church as a whole could not err is far older; only after the idea of the Pope as the universal head of the Church became fully established could the concept of infallibility move toward fulfillment in the person of the Pope." Ref-0093, p. 123. "Canon 749 In virtue of his office the Supreme Pontiff is infallible in his teaching when, as chief Shepherd and Teacher of all Christ's faithful, with the duty of strengthening his brethren in the faith, he proclaims by definitive act a doctrine to be held concerning faith or morals." Roman Catholic Canon Law, <http://www.prairienet.org/nrpcatholic>. "The first major medieval Christian to assert a doctrine of papal infallibility was Peter Olivi, a highly influential Franciscan in the decades following the death of Bonaventure. He lived and wrote at a period of time when the Franciscans were splitting into two major camps: the larger and less strict "Community" and the rigorous "Spirituals." Olivi himself was a prominent spokesman for the Spirituals. The reason that Olivi, unlike Bonaventure, developed a theory of papal infallibility was that he, unlike his predecessor, lived under the constant fear of the possibility that a future pseudo-pope would seek to overturn the true faith (i.e., the Franciscan way of life). It was necessary in the mind of Olivi that the decrees of true popes (such as Nicholas III) "should be regarded as, not only authoritative for the present, but immutable, irrefrangible for all time to come." This, however, was impossible within the framework of the canonists' doctrine of papal sovereignty. They recognized that a doctrine of infallibility would limit the sovereignty of an individual pope. Olivi recognized this as well. His "new theory of papal infallibility was designed to limit the power of future popes, not to loose them from all restraints. Olivi's new doctrine was virtually ignored for forty years. . . . In 1324, [Pope] John [XXII] responded in the Bull Quia quorundam that the "father of lies" had led his enemies to maintain the erroneous thesis that "what the Roman pontiffs have once defined in faith and morals with the key of knowledge stands so immutably that it is not permitted to a successor to revoke it." Tierney comments on the significance of this: 'The exchanges of 1324 are of fascinating interest for a historian of the doctrine of papal infallibility. Here, for the first time, a doctrine of infallibility based on the Petrine power of the keys was overtly propounded. But the doctrine was fathered by anti-papal rebels not by curial theologians. And, far from embracing the doctrine, the pope indignantly denounced it as a pernicious novelty.' . . . The doctrine of papal infallibility was not declared official Roman Catholic dogma until Vatican I in 1870, but its origins can be traced to this obscure thirteenth-century battle between radical Franciscans and the papacy." Ref-0791, pp. 59-61. "One of the more interesting problems with papal infallibility is inadvertently raised in the Catholic Encyclopedia, which argues that "no ex cathedra definition of any pope has every been shown to be erroneous." The problem with this statement is that although Rome claims that ex cathedra statements made by the pope are infallible, she does not even know how many ex cathedra statements the pope has made. Rome believes the pope has made infallible ex cathedra statements that must be adhered to with the obedience of faith, yet she cannot say with any certainty which of the thousands of papal pronouncements are, in fact, ex cathedra. There is no agreement among Roman theologians and apologies on the actual number. Rome has no infallible canon, as it were, of infallible papal statements." Ref-0791, p. 219. For a summary of papal errors, see Ref-0791, pp. 220-222.

Roman Catholicism - papal succession : ☉ + ". . . though published lists of popes down through the centuries look impressive, one should be aware that a comparison of the present list with those of earlier years reveals continuing revision, the last being made in 1947 by A. Mercati. . . . Roman Catholic scholars identify over 30 men as antipopes, or false claimants. Most notable among the antipopes are those involved in a 39-year period called the Great Schism. In 1378 the cardinals elected Urban VI as pope. Soon after this they announced that they had made a terrible mistake. Urban, in their opinion, was now apostate, and so they elected a new Pope, Clement VII. Urban countered by appointing a new college of cardinals. After years of dispute, further successors, and great confusion, cardinals from both sides met and elected yet another man as Pope, Alexander V. When even this did not settle the controversy, Emperor Sigismund called the Council of Constance (1414-1418) to address the problem. When the smoke finally cleared, yet another man, Martin V, was found sitting on the papal throne. Official lists of the lineage of popes today identify Martin V as the 206th successor in the 'unbroken' lineage of the popes." Ref-0165, pp. 254-255. See Ref-0169, p. 14 for a list of popes between A.D. 1294-1605. "An able diplomat, Leo I also made a vital contribution to orthodoxy at the Council of Chalcedon (451). From this time on, the Western Church began to credit the bishop of Rome with being the arbitrator of orthodoxy. This is hardly surprising that near canonical value was given to Leo's teaching concerning the unique authority of the bishop of Rome as the heir of Peter and universal pastor. His most famous pronouncements to this effect are contained in a sermon delivered on the anniversary of his elevation to the pontificate, when he declared that through him, Peter "still today . . . more fully and effectually performs what is entrusted to him." Ref-0685, p. 165. "Although Rome traces the origins of the papacy to the Apostle Peter, the historical evidence indicates that there was no monarchical bishop in Rome until sometime between A.D. 140-150. Instead of a single bishop, it appears that the Roman church was organized under a college of presbyters or presbyter-bishops. No evidence exists for any claims to jurisdictional supremacy by Rom in the first century. The first historical instances of Roman bishops claiming any type of jurisdictional priority outside of Rome itself occurred in the late second century and early third century. Sometime between A.D. 190 and 195 Pope Victor attempted to sever communion with sister churches over the dating of Easter observance, but his actions had virtually no effect. In the middle of the third century, Pope Stephen was at odds with Cyprian of Carthage over the rebaptism of heretics. Cyprian's response to Stephen, however, rather clearly indicates that he did not believe that Stephen had any jurisdictional authority over Carthage. In these early centuries up to the time of Constantine, as Geoffrey Barraclough points out, "the bishop of Rome . . . was in some sense a pope and laid no claim to the position of pope." "The anonymous author of second Maccabees does not claim to speak for God. . . . Roman Catholicism - sacraments : ☉ + "Roman Catholic John O'Brien answers: "[Christ] likewise established the sacraments which serve as so many channels through which the graces and blessings of the Redemption reach the soul of each individual recipient. The administration of the sacraments was entrusted to the Church to which Christ gave complete jurisdiction over the deposit of divine truth and over the means of sanctification. In a very true sense the Church may be said to be the extension of the Incarnation. . . . A sacrament is an outward sign of an inward grace. . . . The sacraments and the holy Sacrifice of the Mass are the chief channels through which the fruits of the Redemption, the blessings and graces of God, are applied to individual souls. . . . Christ by His suffering and death gained vast spiritual riches for us; they may be said to constitute a huge spiritual reservoir. It is necessary that some means be devised to tap the reservoir and carry its riches to our souls. The sacraments are such means: channels of divine grace to the souls of men." Ref-0093, p. 129. "Canon 900 The only minister who, in the person of Christ, can bring into being the sacrament of the Eucharist, is a validly ordained priest. Canon 901 A priest is entitled to offer Mass for anyone, living or dead. Canon 904 Remembering always that in the mystery of the eucharist Sacrifice the work of redemption is continually being carried out, priests are to celebrate frequently. . . ." Roman Catholic Canon Law, <http://www.prairienet.org/nrpcatholic>. "According to Roman Catholic theology, Christ formally established seven sacraments [1113-1114]: 1. Baptism 2. Penance 3. Eucharist 4. Confirmation 5. Matrimony 6. Holy orders 7. Anointing of the sick. . . each sacrament is a channel of God's grace, the 'instrumental cause' of grace [1084]. God is believed to confer grace upon Catholics by means of the sacraments through the proper performance of the sacramental ritual, 'through the sacramental action itself' [1127-1128, 1131]. . . . The Roman Catholic Church teaches that the sacraments are necessary for salvation [1129]." Ref-0165, pp. 56-57.

Roman Catholicism - salvation by works : ☉ + "As one writer puts it, 'Man, for his part, in order to arrive at full sanctification, must cooperate with the grace of the Holy Spirit through faith, hope, love of God and neighbor, and prayer; but he must also perform other "works." It is universally accepted dogma of the Catholic Church that man, in union with the grace of the Holy Spirit must merit heaven by his good works. These works are meritorious only when they are performed in the state of grace and with a good intention. . . . We have shown that according to Holy Scripture the Christian can actually merit heaven for himself by his good works.'" Ref-0093, p. 128.

Roman Catholicism - salvation only in Roman Catholicism : ☉ + "Note just a few of the available statements from the past: Pope Innocent III (December 18, 1208): 'With our hearts we believe and with our lips we confess but one Church, not that of the heretics, but the Holy Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church, outside which we believe that no one is saved.' Pope Pius IX (December 9, 1854): 'It must be held by faith that outside the Apostolic Roman Church, no one can be saved; that this is the only ark of salvation; that he who shall not have entered therein will perish in the flood.' Pope Leo XIII (January 10, 1890) Encyclical Sapientiae Christianae: 'He scatters and gathers not who gathers not with the Church and with Jesus Christ, and all who fight not jointly with Him and with the Church are in very truth contending against God.' Pope Saint Pius X (March 12, 1904) Encyclical lucunda Sane: 'It is our duty to recall to everyone great and small, as the Holy Pontiff Gregory did in ages past, the absolute necessity which is ours to have recourse to this Church to effect our eternal salvation.' Ref-0093, p. 128. Pope Innocent III and Lateran Council IV (A.D. 1215): 'One indeed is the universal Church of the faithful outside which no one at all is saved. . . ' Pope Boniface VIII in his Papal Bull Unam Sanctam (November 18, 1302): 'We declare, say, define, and pronounce that it is absolutely necessary for the salvation of every human creature to be subject to the Roman Pontiff.' Pope Eugene IV and the Council of Florence (February 4, 1442): '[The most Holy Roman Church] firmly believes, professes, and proclaims that those not living within the Catholic Church, not only pagans, but also Jews and heretics and schismatics cannot become participants in eternal life, but will depart 'into everlasting fire which was prepared for the devil and his angels' (Matthew 25:4), unless before the end of life the same have been added t [truncated in error!]" "The papal bulls Unam Sanctam (1302) and Cantate Domine (1441) expressly state that there is absolutely no possibility of salvation for any man outside of visible union with the Roman Catholic church and subjection to the bishop of Rome. The decrees of Vatican II (1962-65), however, expressly allow for the possibility of salvation, not only for non-Roman Catholic Christians, but also for Jews, Muslims, pagans and even those without an "explicit knowledge of God." The issue is not which of either of these two positions is true. The issue is the fact that they cannot both be true, and the fact that the second cannot be seriously considered a "development" of the first. . . . The two doctrines are in direct and complete contradiction with each other, and no amount of explanation can hide that plain fact." Ref-0791, pp. 13-136n25.

Roman Catholicism - second commandment : Ex. 20:4; Deu. 5:8 ☩ Versions of the Catechism of the Catholic Church prior to 1995 removed the second commandment and then split the tenth commandment into two in order to retain the proper number of commandments (ten). Canon Law 1188 supports the practice of displaying sacred images for the veneration of the faithful.

Roman Catholicism - teaching : ☩ + "The task of giving authentic interpretation of the Word of God, whether in written form or in the form of Tradition, has been entrusted to the living teaching office of the Church alone. Its authority in this matter is exercised in the name of Jesus Christ. This means that the task of interpretation has been entrusted to the bishops in communion with the successor of Peter, the Bishop of Rome." The Catholic Catechism of the Catholic Church, Paragraph 85, 1994.

Roman Catholicism - Tradition : ☩ + "Sacred Tradition and sacred Scripture make up a single sacred deposit of the Word of God, which is entrusted to the Church." -- Second Vatican Council, cited by Ref-0165, p. 286.

Roman Catholicism - transubstantiation : Lev. 17:10-14; John 6:53-57; Acts 10:14; Acts 15:29 ☩ + "The Roman Catholic teaching that the bread and wine are actually transformed into the real body and blood of Jesus by the Roman Catholic priest during communion. 'The influential Abbot of Corbie, Paschasius Radbertus, wrote a treatise On the Body and Blood of the Lord. This was the first clear statement of a doctrine of the 'real presence' of Christ's body and blood in the eucharist, suggesting what was later called transubstantiation." Ref-0063, p. 242. ". . . transubstantiation was adopted as orthodox at the Fourth Lateran Council in 1215." Ref-0063, p. 265. "Berengar held that a real and true change takes place in these elements, but that the change is spiritual, and that the bread and wine remain of the same substance. Lanfranc and other theologians debated with him, believing that the underlying substance of the bread and wine was changed to Christ's blood and body, while the 'accidents' (touch, taste, sight and smell) of the bread and wine remained the same." Ref-0063, p. 282. The Council of Trent on the concept of transubstantiation: "(Canon 1) 'If anyone denies that in the sacrament of the most Holy Eucharist are contained truly, really and substantially the body and blood together with the soul and divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and consequently the whole Christ, but says that He is in it only as a sign, or figure or force, let him be anathema.' (Canon 2) 'If anyone says that in the sacred and holy sacrament of the Eucharist the substance of the bread and wine remains conjointly with the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and denies that wonderful and singular change of the whole substance of the bread into the body and the whole substance of the wine into the blood, the appearances only of bread and wine remaining, which change the Catholic Church most aptly calls transubstantiation, let him be anathema.' (Canon 8): 'If anyone says that Christ received in the Eucharist is received spiritually only and not also sacramentally and really, let him be anathema.'" Ref-0093, p. 162. A refutation of the literal interpretation of John 6 can be seen by comparing John 6:40 with [John 6:54]. . . . everyone who [He who] beholds the Son [eats My flesh] and [and] believes in Him [drinks My blood] may have eternal life [has eternal life] and [and] I Myself will raise him up [I will raise him up] on the last day [on the last day]. Ref-0165, p. 141. "The philosophical basis for the theory comes from the writings of Aristotle. He taught that all matter consists of two parts: accidents and substance. Aristotle defined accidents as the outward appearance of an object, and substance as its inner essence, the core of its reality." Ref-0165, pp. 133-134. ". . . the alleged miraculous change explained by transubstantiation is not in the Bible. Neither is there a biblical precedent for a miracle in which God expects the faithful to believe that something supernatural has occurred when in fact all outward evidence indicates that nothing at all has occurred. God has never dealt with people in that way." Ref-0165, p. 134. "For a Jew, drinking human blood would have been more than just repulsive; it would have been unlawful [Lev. 17:10-14]. We can be sure that if the disciples had thought that Jesus was asking them to violate this command, heated discussion and loud protests would have resulted. . . . Furthermore, had the disciples drunk Christ's blood at the Last Supper, Peter could not have claimed months later: '? . . I have never eaten anything unholy and unclean' (Acts 10:14). Additionally, the council at Jerusalem could not have instructed Gentile Christians to 'abstain. . . from blood' (Acts 15:29) if Christians routinely drank Christ's blood at the Lord's Supper." Roman Catholicism - venial and mortal sins : ☩ + "Roman Catholic theology separates sin into two main categories: venial and mortal. Theologian John Hardon defines venial sin: 'An offense against God which does not deprive the sinner of sanctifying grace. It is called venial (from venia, pardon) because the soul still has the vital principle that allows a cure from within, similar to the healing of a sick or diseased body whose source of animation (the soul) is still present to restore the ealing bodily function to health.' On the other hand, mortal sin is: 'An actual sin that destroys sanctifying grace and causes the supernatural death of the soul. Mortal sin is a turning away from God because of a seriously inordinate adherence to creatures that causes grave injury to a person's rational nature and to the social order, and deprives the sinner of a right to heaven.'" Ref-0093, p. 126. Venial sins have the contradictory distinction of not being serious enough to result in loss of justification while being too serious to be fully atoned for by Christ's work on the cross!

Roman Catholicism - vs. Protestantism : ☩ "There is, indeed, in our day a spurious liberality that would teach us to forego the indictment which history affords against the Church of Rome; but while no generous mind will refuse to own the moral worth of those who, in England at least, now guide the counsels of that Church, the real question at issue relates to the character, not of individuals, but of a system. It is the part, therefore, not of intolerant bigotry, but of true wisdom, to search the records of the past--terrible records, truly--for the means of judging of that system. The inquiry which concerns us is not whether good men are found within the pale of Rome--as though all the moral excellence of earth could avail to cover the annals of her hideous guilt! Our true inquiry is whether she has suffered any real change in these enlightened days. Is the Church of Rome reformed? With what vehemence the answer would be shrieked from every altar within her pale! And if not, let but dark days come again, and some of the foulest scenes and blackest crimes in the history of Christendom may be re-enacted in Europe. "The true test of a man is not what he does, but what, with the principles he holds, he would do," and if this be true of individuals, it is still more intensely true of communities. They do good service, therefore, who keep before the public mind the real character of Rome as the present day development of the apostasy." Ref-0762, p. 133.

Romans - commentaries : Rom. 1:1 ☆ + "The Best Commentaries on Romans: Remember, this list has preachers primarily in mind: 1. Douglas Moo (NICNT) ? Somewhat dense, which may hinder readers somewhat, but interaction with the text and the literature is very impressive. Deals well with the 'new perspective', and even manages some applications (but see Moo's contribution to the NIVAC series). His Introduction is on the short side, but there are numerous excurses. Not all will like his treatment of Chapter 7. 2. Thomas Schreiner (BECNT) ? I might have put this first because of its accuracy and usability. Still a big book, but not as intimidating as Moo. Pastors should purchase both works. 3. John R.W. Stott (BST) ? After Moo and Schreiner one could do worse than studying Stott's outstanding exposition. Brings out the argument very well and shows how the book may be preached. One bad spot, he teaches theistic evolution! 4. Leon Morris (Pillar) ? Very competent mid-level commentary. Doesn't mix it up with the Sanders/Dunn crowd, but provides a very sure-footed guide. 5. James R. Edwards (NIBC) ? This is a surprisingly helpful book. Edwards' style enables him to deal with most interpretive problems within a brief compass. 6. John Murray (older NICNT) ? Replaced by Moo but not completely eclipsed. Very theological (which suits Romans). Murray always presses the weight of Divine truth upon the mind, though his style is ponderous. 7. R.C.H. Lenski ? Conservative semi-pelagian, but there is much good material here. 8. John Calvin ? It is amazing that Calvin can say so much in so few words. This was his first commentary. 9. W.H. Griffith Thomas ? A deceptively simple commentary which asks great questions of the text and gives real aid to the expositor. 10. C.E.B. Cranfield (ICC) ? Cranfield's commentary has almost legendary status, and its handling of the Greek text is wonderfully impressive. His English prose also flows easily. But there is a lot to pick through, especially his Barthian leanings. No doubt there are readers of this list who wonder why certain writers did not make the list. Well, if I could offer a brief apology I would say that I chose Stott over Osborne (IVPNTC), Murray over Hendriksen (NTC), Lenski over Witherington, and Griffith Thomas over Bruce (TNTC). Other worthwhile commentaries are by Godet, Haldane, Schlatter and Custer. I'm sure J.P. Lange would be quite good if I could understand what he was saying. I give no place to Barth, Dunn or Achtemeier as I just don't think they are worth messing with. But Nygren's introduction (especially his stuff on the two aeons in chapter 5) is very helpful." Ref-0197, p. 89. "A common error is made when the 'rich root' (NASB) of the tree, into which the wild olive branches representing the Gentiles are grafted, is understood as Israel. But the apostle plainly identifies Israel with the 'natural branches' from 'a cultivated olive tree,' some of which have been broken off at the present time. . . . Rather than being Israel, the root must be seen as something which provides life and nourishment to both the 'natural' and 'wild' branches -- i.e., Israel and the Gentiles. While Christ is the ultimate fulfillment of this root, historically it is the covenant promise to Abraham which is no doubt in the apostle's mind. Israel was the natural branches, as it had already enjoyed the covenant privileges from the beginning. Now the Gentiles were being grafted in to share that promise -- not, however, as 'the great nation,' but as 'all peoples on earth' in fulfillment of the original promise which contained both peoples." Robert L. “Even though Daniel was told to seal up and preserve the book for the time of the end and specifically for the Jewish people during the tribulation, it does not mean that no one will be able to understand these prophecies until that time. I believe that Daniel's prophecy can be understood today by born-again believers who study and search out their meaning. However, in context, this passage is specifically saying that the Jewish people, as a whole, will not come to understand the prophecies of the book of Daniel until the end of time. . . . One of the interesting things as I studies this passage was that I consulted over 50 commentaries. Only two of those works put for the increase in travel viewpoint. One was a historicist interpreter from the nineteenth century and the other one did not even interact with the text, he just started expounding his view. I bring this point up to make the point that the text does not support such a view even though that view has a certain level of popularity.” Thomas Ice, “Running To and Fro”, Ref-0181, Vol. 8 No. 16, August 2004, p. 8.

Sabbath - covenant theology confuses : Ex. 20:8; Deu. 5:12; Mtt. 5:17 ☪ + “Covenant theologians agree that the dietary laws, ceremonial laws, and circumcision have been abolished, but many covenant theologians restrict the meaning of the Law to the Ten Commandments. Yet even there they change the Sabbath to refer to Sunday. Thus out of 613 commandments in the Mosaic Covenant they would retain only nine (1.47 percent). Sabbath - land - calendar of Sabbatical years : Lev. 25:2-15; Eze. 40:1 ☪ + See Ref-0840, pp. 118-121. “Dating these Sabbatical years has been the occasion of considerable controversy, with basically two competing systems. The two systems are associated with the name of Benedict Zuckermann, whose calendar places the start of a Sabbatical year associated with Herod the Great's siege of Jerusalem in Tishri of 38 B.C. (1857/1974:61), and the calendar of Ben Zion Wacholder, which starts the Sabbatical year one year later, in Tishri of 37 B.C. (1976:32). All attempts, however, to project post-exilic Sabbatical cycles back into pre-exilic times have failed . . . The reason for this is that counting was interrupted during the exile, since the stipulations of the Sabbatical years were only commanded to be observed while Israel was in its land (Lev. 25:2). . . . As part of the reforms under Ezra and Nehemiah, the observance of the Sabbatical years was reinstated (Ne. 10:31). That counting was renewed at this time is stated explicitly in chap. 30 of the Seder Olam (second century A.D.) and the Talmud (Arakin 32b). We therefore should not expect that pre-exilic Sabbatical years can be back-calculated from those observed after the exile. But there is a date to which the calendar of pre-exilic Jubilee and Sabbatical years can be anchored, and it is less ambiguous than Josephus's account of a post-exilic Sabbatical year in the days of Herod. This date has all the desirable qualifications: it is precise; it is derived from the biblical text; and it marks both a Jubilee and a Sabbatical year, thus providing at one stroke the needed starting-point so that the timing of pre-exilic Sabbatical and Jubilee years can be determined. This all-important date can be determined from the Hebrew text of Ezekiel 40:1, the verse that Ezekiel gives to date the vision that occupies the last nine chapters of his book. . . . What is striking [in Eze. 40:1] is the apparent inconsistency in saying it was both a New Year's day and the tenth of the month. In order to reconcile this, most English translations render Rosh HaShanah as an indefinite "beginning of the year," instead of the specific meaning that is familiar to all who are acquainted with the Jewish calendar, namely "New Year's Day." It seems that translators could not understand how "New Year's Day" could be on the tenth of the month, and so they used the more indefinite expression, indicating that it was sometime around the beginning of the year. This is in spite of the meaning that Rosh HaShanah bears down to modern times, as referring to a specific day. Although Rosh HaShanah at present is always celebrated on the first of Tishri, there was one time when it moved nine days later to the tenth of the month. That was in a Jubilee year. Leviticus 25:9 says that the Jubilee year was to be announced by the blowing of the shofar on the tenth of Tishri, the Day of Atonement. Since in all other years the (agricultural) year started on the first of Tishri, it follows that Ezekiel's vision was at the beginning of a Jubilee year. The Talmud agrees that Ezekiel saw his vision on the Day of Atonement at the beginning of a Jubilee year (Arakin 12a). The Hebrew text of the Seder Olam (chap. 11) states that Ezekiel saw his vision at the beginning of a Jubilee without citing the part of Ezekiel 40:1 saying that it was Rosh HaShanah and also the tenth of the month, indicating that the Seder Olam's statement may have been based on historical remembrance and not on just the textual argument. . . . Ezekiel's statement that the year was both the 25th year of the captivity he shared with Jehoiachin and also 14 years after Jerusalem fell cannot be reconciled with a 586 date for the fall of the city. It is, however, consistent with a date for the fall in the summer of 587 B.C. and a date on the tenth of Tishri, 574 B.C. for the vision." Roger C. Young, Evidence for Inerrancy from a Second Unexpected Source: the Jubilee and Sabbatical Cycles, Ref-0066 21:4 (2008), 109:122, p. 115. "Previously it was stated that the timing of all Jubilee years can be calculated by going back in 49-year intervals from Ezekiel's Jubilee that started in Tishri of 574 B.C. . . . we find that the year beginning in Tishri of 1406 B.C. was the first year of a Jubilee cycle. . . . This is identical to the date for the entry into Canaan that can be derived from 1 Kings 6:1, the verse which synchronizes Solomon's fourth year with the 480th year of the Exodus-era. . . . The Seder Olam (chap. 11) and the Talmud (Arakin 12b) give the number of Ezekiel's Jubilee: the 17th. This is in exact agreement with the entry into Canaan in 1406 B.C." Roger C. Young, Evidence for Inerrancy from a Second Unexpected Source: the Jubilee and Sabbatical Cycles, Ref-0066 21:4 (2008), 109:122, p. 118-119.

The Handyman Company had been fined 155,000 shekels for employing workers on Sabbath, and in turn sued the State against the Sabbath law. In rejecting the suit, Justice Dornor wrote, 'The determination of the Sabbath as the Jews' day of rest embodies the values of the State as Jewish and democratic.'" "Haredi [ultra-Orthodox Jews ? one who trembles in awe of God] are very, very conservative as they try to keep the Old Testament Law, word for word, all 613 Jewish laws! . . . For instance, on Shabbat, they can't do any work whatsoever. They tear up their toilet paper the day before in a little pile next to the toilet so they don't have to do work (tearing toilet paper) on Shabbat. Nor do they make or receive phone calls drive a car, or do anything that could be considered work. Most all the hotels in Israel have a specially designated elevator to use on Shabbat. it goes up and down all day automatically stopping at each floor. That way, the Haredi can use the elevator without pushing buttons-which would be considered "work." The wives cook all the food for Shabbat the day before." Bill Perkins,

Sabbath - origin : Ex. 16:23; Ex. 20:8-11 ☩
 "The Sabbath is one of those pre-Mosaic institutions; it was enforced in but not originated by the Sinaitic revelation, for it was recognized as existing before the enunciation of the fourth commandment, as for example, in connection with the gathering of manna (Ex. 16:23). The truth of this assertion is conformed [sic] by the fact that there are traces of it among the primeval nations. The Babylonians knew it as "a day of rest for heart." Among the thousands of tablets found at the site of Nineveh-where they were deposited by Assurbanipal-the Sardanapalus of the Greeks, are the copies of Akkadian inscriptions of dating (according to George Smith) beyond 2000 B.C., which testify to the observation of a sacred day, a seventh day of rest. Similar vestiges of a primeval Sabbath are found in the ancient literatures of India, China, and other lands." In contrast, the Greek version (and the Samaritan Pentateuch, the Peshitta, and the Genesis Midrash [Bereshith Rabbah]) reads, "On the sixth day God ended his work." The Hebrew expression could be construed to mean that God actually did some work on the seventh day before he rested. Because of the importance of this passage for Sabbath-keeping, this point apparently was argued and settled among Jewish exegetes, so texts subsequent to that exegetical discussion were reworded to avoid suggesting that God created anything on the seventh day. The cessation of work on the sixth day is meant to indicate that God must have worked right up to the last moment before the seventh day, but ceased his work as soon as the seventh day had begun. . . . To complicate the [textual criticism] matter further, the evidence that the Greek reading in Genesis 2:2 also appears in the Samaritan Pentateuch raises the question whether the Hebrew parent text from which the Greek was translated already contained the reading." Ref-0838, p. 98.

After all, it had been the neglect of this part of her religion that had brought Israel to such dire straits. Since the temple stood no more, only the moral and ethical part of religious practice was still possible. The implications of this shift are evident. The focus on participation in ritual and ceremony gave way to study of the law and its application to daily life. Whereas ceremonial observance had required a central temple, religious Jews now gathered in places designed for study, discussion, and the administration of justice (eventually synagogues). Leadership of the people moved from the professional priestly tribe to lay scholar-teachers (eventually scribes and rabbis) who knew and could apply the precepts; thus the old aristocracy of birth had to compete with one of learning." sacrifice - types : ☪ "There were five major types of sacrifices. They differed in motive, material, and method: 1. The burnt offering, which called for a domestic animal or bird, was the regular evening and morning sacrifice. It was entirely consumed on the altar and always accompanied by a grain offering. 2. The peace offering ("fellowship offering," NIV; "sacrifice of well-being," NRSV), which involved an animal, was a voluntary offering in which family and friends participated. There were three kinds, depending on the motive of the worshiper: the thank (praise) offering recognized God's unmerited or unexpected blessing; the votive offering was made in payment of a vow; and the freewill offering was an expression of love for God. Each type of peace offering was accompanied by a prescribed grain offering. 3. Sin offerings were made for sin committed unwittingly or for ceremonial defilement (there was no offering for a willful sin). Both the ritual and the victim (domestic animal or bird) varied according to the prominence and economic state of the one who had sinned. 4. Trespass (guilt) offerings were required for ritual infractions or for wrongdoing to another person. These wrongs required both correction or restitution and presentation of an offering. 5. The grain (meal, cereal, food ["meat," KJV]) offering was the only sacrifice which did not involve animal life; instead the products of the soil were offered. These could be oil or frankincense, parched or roasted grain, unleavened bread, cakes, or wafers. The grain offering usually accompanied some other form of offering, especially the burnt or peace offering." Ref-1200, pp. 67-68.

Sadducees - deny supernatural : Mtt. 22:23; Mtt. 22:29-32; Mark 12:18; Mark 12:24-27; Luke 20:27; Acts 4:1-2; Acts 23:8; Acts 24:21; Acts 26:6-8 ☪ The Pharisees believed in a resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees did not believe this. The Sadducees asked whose wife would the woman who was married to 7 husbands be after the resurrection (which they didn't believe in). Jesus elsewhere uses classic OT passages of the resurrection of the dead (Dan. 12:2; Job 19:25-26; Is. 26:19). The Pharisees believed you could derive doctrine from any part of Scripture, but the Sadducees held that you can only derive doctrine from the five books of Moses. Although you could use the prophets and writings to illustrate doctrine, you could not derive doctrine from anything but the Torah. Since they could not find any teaching on the resurrection of the dead in the five books of Moses, they did not believe in it. So, for Jesus to quote the above OT verses to the Sadducees it would have been non-authoritative for them. So, Jesus quotes Ex. 3:6 (Abrahamic Covenant). Why? In the Abrahamic Covenant a biblical principle is found that they accept. It is, "if God makes a promise to an individual and that individual dies before God's promise is fulfilled, it obligates God to raise them back to life to fulfill the promise because every promise of God must be fulfilled to the individual to whom He makes it. This is why Abraham was willing to kill Isaac knowing God would fulfill His promises about Isaac one way or another." Arnold Fruchtenbaum, Prophecy and the Nation Israel, Tyndale Theological Seminary. [<http://www.tyndale.edu>]. "In general it seems the Sadducees had supported those interpretations and procedures which enhanced the prestige, power, and finances of the priestly temple cult and the aristocracy. The Pharisees took the opposite position. . . . As a result of their exclusion of God (fate) from human affairs and their conviction that humans can expect nothing beyond this life, the Sadducees were essentially secularists." Ref-1200, p. 208.

Sadducees - end of : ☪ "Inseparably bound to the political, social, and especially the temple-centered institutions of Judaism, the Sadducees passed into the pages of history with the destruction of the Jewish temple and temple in A.D. 70." Ref-1200, p. 208.

Sadducees - Hasmonean supporters : ☪ "At first Hyrcanus favored the Pharisees, but turned from them to the Sadducees when one of the Pharisees, Eleazer, urged him to give up the high priesthood and be content with political and military power. The reason given was the (probably unfounded) rumor that his mother had been a captive and hence was defiled; it is also possible that theological objections to the union of the offices of ruler and priest in a single individual may have been involved. From this time onward, with the sole exception of Salome Alexandra, the Pharisees were enemies of the Hasmonean dynasty; there grew a strong relationship between the Hasmonians and the Sadducees. . . . Hyrcanus did not claim the title of king, but acted as if he occupied that position." Ref-1200, p. 86.

Sadducees - meaning : ☪ "Working with the name Sadducee, attempts have been made to determine the origin of this group. Suggestions including linking it with the Old Testament priestly family of Zadok, the Hebrew work for "just" or "righteous" (ṣā'ddīq), or "court officials" or "judges" (Greek, syndikoi). Unfortunately, there are problems with such etymologies and all other attempts to identify the origin of the Sadducees." Ref-1200, pp. 207-208.

These would ignore passages such as Luke 23:43 and 1Cor. 1:17 which clearly show just the opposite. "[Acts 22:16] contains four segments: (a) arise (which is a participle, arising), (b) be baptized (an imperative), (c) wash away your sins (another imperative), and (d) calling on the name of the Lord (another participle). To make the verse teach baptism is necessary for salvation necessitates connecting parts two and three -- be baptized and wash away. But rather than being connected to each other, each of those commands is actually connected with the participle. Arising is necessary before baptism and calling before sins can be wash[ed] away. Thus the verse should be read this way: Arising, be baptized; washing away your sins, calling on the Lord. The verse correctly understood does not teach baptismal regeneration." Ref-0098, p. 337. "The Greek word for 'unto the remission of sins' [Acts 2:38] can also mean 'on the basis of' or 'because of' (Mtt. 10:41; Mtt. 12:41). salvation - basis of : John 1:21; John 7:40; Eph. 3:10; 1Pe. 1:10 ☪ "The basis of salvation in every age is the death of Christ; the requirement for salvation in every age is faith; the object of faith in every age is God; the content of faith changes in the various dispensations. It is this last point, of course, that distinguishes dispensationalism from covenant theology, but it is not a point to which the charge of teaching two ways of salvation can be attached. It simply recognizes the obvious fact of progressive revelation. When Adam looked upon the coats of skins with which God had clothed him and his wife, he did not see what the believer today sees looking back on the cross of Calvary." Ref-0056, p. 115. "The understanding of the average Israelite concerning Messiah at the time Jesus walked the earth was very feeble (John 1:21; 7:40), and even the prophets lacked comprehension (1 Peter 1:10-11). These passages make it impossible to say that Old Testament saints under the law exercised personal faith in Jesus Christ." Ref-0056, p. 120. "It makes no difference which period of time or what condition one refers to; the salvation of a sinner has always been, and will always be, by God's grace through faith. The basis upon which God forgives sin has always been the substitutionary death of Christ. Men have not always known what we know about the person and work of Christ, simply because all that has been revealed in the New Testament was not made known to the men of God who wrote the Old Testament. Therefore, while God has always required personal faith as the condition of salvation, the content of that faith has not always been explicit. Those who lived before Calvary knew very little of the atoning blood of Christ. Many of the sacrifices and offerings were types of the Savior and the final and complete work he would do, but it is doubtful that the Old Testament Pharisaic types understood all of that. Certainly the believing remnant did not trust in the blood of bulls and goats. Yet God accounted their faith to them for righteousness. He accepted the work of his Son as already finished." salvation - OT saint's understanding : Mtt. 16:21; Mtt. 17:22-23; Mtt. 20:17-19; 1Cor. 15:1-4; 1Pe. 1:10-12 ☪ "It is interesting that Gerstner admits that the Old Testament believers' faith in Christ was 'hazy with regard to details' (ibid.). How, then, can it be 'meaningfully described as faith in Jesus Christ,' especially since Gerstner elsewhere states, 'It is generally acknowledged and explicitly stated in Scripture that the prophets did not always understand what they were prophesying. Even with respect to the Incarnation itself and details concerning it, they were mystified' (p. 96)? He then quotes 1 Peter 1:10-12, the same Scripture passage he insists 'shows clearly that the prophets prophesied of the grace that would come' (p. 166). The coming of that grace was future to the prophesying of it, and the prophets did not fully comprehend all they were prophesying. As Gerstner wrote, 'If the prophets could be mystified about the sufferings of Christ and the glories to follow, events which are central to the redemptive work of Christ, it would not be surprising that they could be baffled by minute measurements of a future temple' (p. 97). Not only did the prophets -- to say nothing of the Old Testament saints -- not understand 'the grace that would come,' but even the apostles could not accept the statements of the Lord Jesus 'that He must go to Jerusalem, and suffer many things from the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised up on the third day' (Matt 16:21; cf. 17:22-23; 20:17-19). In light of this evidence, how could the Old Testament saints consciously have had faith in Christ and His redemptive death and resurrection (cf. 1 Cor 15:1-4)?" John A. No, we are to preach Christ to him and do all we can to convert him, for what he needs is a new nature, a new outlook, a new mind. It is no use our expecting to find figs on a thorn bush, however much we may treat and tend and care for it. The trouble is the root. We are wasting our time and neglecting our duty by preaching morality to a lost world. For what the world needs is life, new life, and it can be found in Christ alone. Often the soul-winner presents the gospel as though some special kind or amount of faith is required for salvation. . . . As far as the Scripture is concerned, God simply requires removal of trust in self and redirection of trust to Christ. It is true that a person must be sincere when trusting Christ, but it must always be remembered that Christ saves, not one's faith. Man's reception of God's great gift of salvation adds nothing to the completed work of Christ. So it is not Christ's substitutionary atonement plus faith in Christ that provides the basis of acceptance with God. Samaria - origin : 1K. 16:24 ☪ "1K. 16:24 tells us how Omri purchased from Shemer a hill called Samaria, on which he built the capital of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. As the capitol city, Samaria also became the term used to identify the entire territory of the ten tribes of the Northern Kingdom, all the tribes over which Jeroboam made himself king. Since the Northern Kingdom did not want its citizens traveling to the temple in Jerusalem, capital of the Southern Kingdom, they established Samaria as a competing religious as well as political center. All sorts of idolatrous worship evolved there." Ref-0105, p. 186.

17:24-29; Luke 10:33; Luke 17:16; John 4:9; Luke 8:48 ☪ "Because of this record [2K. 17:24-29], the Jews regarded the Samaritans as half-pagan syncretists whose substitution of Mt. Gerizim in Shechem for the legitimate Temple in Jerusalem denied their claim to be true worshippers of God. This rejection is evidenced in the Gospels (for example, John 4:9) and is affirmed by Josephus (Antiquities 9.288).. However, this Samaritan distinctive was included in the Samaritan Pentateuch, so that worship on Mt. Gerizim became the "tenth commandment!" Ref-0818, p. 72.

Samson - blinded : Jdg. 16:21 ☪ "The Philistines gouged out his eyes and made him a grinder in the prison (Jdg. 16:21). Block notes that the Philistines were following an ancient Near East custom. Prisoners were blinded and then forced to do menial tasks of slaves and women.²⁹ So Samson, ironically, ended up doing a woman's job. The man, who had incredible strength over other men was defeated in his greatest weakness, that of foreign women, to end up emasculated and doing the task of a woman. The reversal of responsibilities, already seen in the Deborah-Barak story, reaches its peak in the final judge himself." Michael J. Smith, The Failure of the Family in Judges, Part 2: Samson, Ref-0200 vol. 162 no. 648, October-December 2005 424:436, pp. 434-435.

Samson - Nazirite : "Normally the vow was taken for a period of time, but Samson was to be a Nazirite from birth to death (Judg. 13:7)." Michael J. Smith, The Failure of the Family in Judges, Part 2: Samson, Ref-0200 vol. 162 no. 648, October-December 2005 424:436, p. 426n6.; Jdg. 13:7

Samson - Othniel - compared : ☪ "In Gooding's chiasmic pattern for the Book of Judges, Samson is opposite Othniel and presents a contrast in the area of the home. Othniel is the first deliverer, Samson is the last. If at the beginning it was intermarriage with Gentiles that got Israel into trouble so that they needed a deliverer, at the end the deliverer is guilty of the very same thing himself. There could not, then, be a more vivid contrast than that between Othniel the first judge and Samson the last: Othniel's wife was his incentive to drive out the Gentiles, Samson's wives were his incentive to live among, rather than drive out, the Philistines; Othniel's wife pressed him to ask for her father extra inheritance, Samson's wives pressed him to reveal his secrets (Jdg. 15:17 and 16:16). And whereas the introduction says that intermarriage led to Israel's serving the Gentiles' gods (Jdg. 3:7), Samson is the only judge in the series who, far from delivering the people, was captured and celebrated by the enemy as a remarkable instance of the triumph of their god, Dagon (Jdg. 16:23-24); only by his death was that triumph annulled.¹⁵ Samson is also a picture of the nation.¹⁶ Israel was faulted for living among and intermarrying with the Canaanite enemy. After Samson's birth narrative (Jdg. 13), the rest of his story centers on his pursuit of Philistine women. Samson is an example of Israel's "playing the harlot after other gods" (Jdg. 2:17; 8:27, 32)." Michael J. Smith, The Failure of the Family in Judges, Part 2: Samson, Ref-0200 vol. 162 no. 648, October-December 2005 424:436, pp. 430-431.

Samson - Philistine temple destroyed : Jdg. 16:28-30 ☪ "... during a 1972 excavation the first philistine temple ever to be found was brought to light at Tell Qasile, on the north side of Tell Aviv. This temple is comprised of an antechamber and main hall. According to [Bryant G.] Wood, "this hall, with inside measurements of 18 1/2 feet by 23 1/2 feet, is a room whose roof was originally supported by two wooden pillars set on round, well-made stone bases, placed along a center axis" . . . The Hebrew text is very clear in its description of the actions of Samson. The text reads that Samson grasped the two middle pillars that supported the house of the temple, . . . (one with his right hand and one with his left). The pillar bases at Tell Qasile are about 2 m (7 ft) apart, well within the reach of a tall man. . . . One should observe that the text notes that Samson killed more people at his death than he did during his lifetime (Jdg. 16:30). The text states that the temple was full of men and women; the Philistine lords were present and about 3,000 people looked on from the roof (Jdg. 16:27). The validity of this description has been challenged by many scholars, . . . Admittedly, the temple at Tell Qasile does not substantiate this type of number as the building measures only 26 ft (8 m) in width with 47 ft (14.5 m) in length. This seems to indicate that the understanding of the number of people in attendance must be redefined. The Hebrew term 'elep represents the numeral 1,000. However, there are several specialized meanings attached to this term. One meaning is that the term represents the "largest basic division of leadership in the political oversight or military leadership." Also, "it is occasionally alleged that since 'elep means a company of a thousand men it could mean any military unit, even of reduced strength" (Scott 1980: 48). Therefore, it seems as though the text is referring to three distinct contingencies that were in attendance, in addition to the followers of Dagon who filled the temple." John Roskoski, Between the Pillars: Revisiting "Sampson and the House of Dagon", Ref-0066, 18:1 (2005), pp. 15-17.

Samson - wife - Philistine : Deu. 7:1-3; Jdg. 14:1-2 ☪ "After going to a Philistine city and seeing a Philistine woman, Samson returned to his parents and told them to "get her for me as a wife" (14:1-2). His parents objected, asking whether there was not someone among their own people he could pick rather than "a wife from the uncircumcised Philistines" (v. 3). Apparently they knew that intermarriage was not permitted in Israel (Deut. 7:1-3), but Block faults them for not standing firm . . . They sinned by following through with his demand." Michael J. Smith, The Failure of the Family in Judges, Part 2: Samson, Ref-0200 vol. 162 no. 648, October-December 2005 424:436, p. 429.

Samuel - book - divided : 1S. 1:1; 2S. 1:1; 1Chr. 1:1; 2Chr. 1:1; Ezra 1:1; Ne. 1:1 ☪ + "The work of the Venetian printer Daniel Bomberg, a wealthy Christian merchant from Antwerp, was destined to have the greatest influence on the subsequent history of the printed Hebrew Bible. At the encouragement of a Jewish convert to Christianity, Felix Pratensis of the Order of Augustinian Hermits, Bomberg sponsored the editing and printing in 1515-1517 of what has come to be known as the First Rabbinic Bible, a four-volume work fully pointed and accented, with Targums and rabbinic commentaries in the margins. The edition is also noteworthy for having the Christian chapter divisions marked for the first time in a Hebrew Bible, for dividing the books of Samuel, Chronicles, and Ezra-Nehemiah into two books each, and for recording the consonants of the qere readings for the first time in the margins." It is clearly stated in 16:5 that the two goats constituted a sin offering. Crawford suggested consequently that the two goats embodied two aspects of one sacrifice; the first exhibited the means, and the other the results of the atonement. Erdman corroborated this thought. "The first goat signified the means of reconciliation to God, namely, but the death and sprinkled blood of a vicarious offering, so the dismissal of the second goat typified the effect of the expiation in the removal of the sin from the presence of a holy God."" What counts as "truth"? is what scientists can agree to count as truth at any particular moment in time . . . [Scientists] are not really receptive or not really open-minded to any sorts of criticisms or any sorts of claims that actually are attacking some of the established parts of the research (traditional) paradigm--in this case neo-Darwinism--so it is very difficult for people who are pushing claims that contradict the paradigm to get a hearing. They'll find it difficult to [get] research grants; they'll find it hard to get their research published; they'll, in fact, find it very hard. . . .* As Robert Higgs put it: Researchers who employ unorthodox methods or theoretical frameworks have great difficulty under modern conditions in getting their findings published in the "best" journals or, at times, in any scientific journal. Scientific innovators or creative eccentrics always strike the great mass of practitioners as nut cases--until it becomes impossible to deny their findings, a time that often comes only after one generation's professional ring-masters have died off. Science is an odd undertaking: everybody strives to make the next breakthrough, yet when someone does, he is often greeted as if he were carrying the ebola virus. Too many people have too much invested in the reigning ideas; for those people an acknowledgment of their own idea's bankruptcy is tantamount to an admission that they have wasted their lives. Often, perhaps to avoid cognitive dissonance, they never admit that their ideas were wrong." Andrew Kulikovsky, Creationism, science and peer review, Ref-0784, 22(1) 2008, 44:49, p. 47. scripture - alone - tradition 0 - meaning : ☉ + "Building on Oberman's terminology, Alistair McGrath refers to the Anabaptist concept of Scripture and tradition as "Tradition 0" -- a view which allows no role whatsoever to tradition. This is in contrast to "Tradition I", the position of the magisterial Reformers, a position which allowed for a traditional interpretation of Scripture. He explains the radical view: "For the radicals (or "fanatics," as Luther dubbed them), such as Thomas

Muntzer and Caspar Schwenkfeld, every individual had the right to interpret Scripture as he pleased, subject to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. . . . "Tradition 0" placed the private judgment of the individual above the corporate judgement of the Christian church concerning the interpretation of Scripture. It was a recipe for anarchy -- and, as the history of radical Reformation sadly demonstrates, that anarchy was not slow to develop." Ref-0791, pp. 126-127. "Essentially what we see in eighteenth-century America is the wholesale adoption of an extreme version of Tradition 0. The doctrine of Scripture and tradition espoused by the Reformers (Tradition I) was completely rejected in favor of a radically individualized doctrine of scriptural authority. These men and women retained the Reformation slogan sola scriptura, but their doctrine was far removed from the doctrine of Martin Luther and John Calvin. Unfortunately, it is this eighteenth-century populist doctrine of Scripture which is often confused with the Reformation doctrine of sola scriptura. The simple fact of the matter is that the doctrine commonly held today has much more in common with Enlightenment rationalism than with Reformation theology." Ref-0791, p. 145. "In our own day the confusion over the definition of sola scriptura is astounding. The majority of evangelicalism has adopted Tradition 0 and convinced itself that this was the doctrine of the Reformers. The ideas of the rule of faith as a hermeneutical boundary or of the church as a subordinate ministerial authority are virtually anathema in modern individualist evangelicalism." Ref-0791, p. 149. "In other words, the fact that Scripture alone is our infallible authority does not mean that we can interpret Scripture alone. The sola scriptura of Luther and Calvin is not the Reformation doctrine unless it is understood within the context of Tradition I. Scripture is the sole infallible authority and the sole source of revelation, but it must be interpreted in and by the Church within the hermeneutical boundaries of the rule of faith (Christian orthodoxy -- as defined for example in the Nicene Creed. A doctrine of scriptural authority separated from its apostolic ecclesiastical and hermeneutical context is neither Reformational nor Christian." Ref-0791, p. 150. "In this chapter we shall examine this aberrant modern Evangelical concept of sola scriptura and explain why it is imperative that the Evangelical church recognize it to be as dangerous as the distorted concepts of sola fide that are prevalent in the Church today." Ref-0791, p. 238. "According to adherents of sola scriptura, the Bible is the only authority because its books are inspired, but the Bible nowhere includes an inspired list of inspired books. What this means is that sola scriptura can assert that Scripture is the only authority, but it cannot define with any absolute certainty what Scripture is. When adherents do attempt to define and defend a particular canon, they cannot do so using the Bible as their only authority. In order for sola scriptura to be true, the Bible would have to include not only all of the inspired books of the Bible, but also an inspired table of contents telling us which books are really inspired. However, even this would not be enough, for we would not know that the table of contents was inspired apart from extra-scriptural divine intervention or another inspired document telling us that the original list was inspired. Of course then we would just move the problem back another step, and so into infinity. Most proponents of sola scriptura simply ignore the problem of the canon as if the Bibles they hold in their hands dropped whole and complete from heaven. . . . The doctrine of sola scriptura presupposes a complete and closed canon that it cannot account for or defend on its own principles. This fundamental self-contradiction is one of its most obvious flaws." Ref-0791, pp. 248-249.

scripture - alone - tradition I - historical meaning : ☩ + "Much of the problem involved in the historical debate over the authority of Scripture concerns the ambiguity surrounding the meaning of the word "tradition." In present day usage, the term commonly denotes unwritten doctrines handed down orally in the Church. It is therefore often contrasted with Scripture. However, a remarkable scholarly consensus shows that in the early church, Scripture and Tradition were in no way mutually exclusive concepts because they coincided with each other completely. What this means is that throughout the history of the Church, including the Protestant Reformation, what we find is a battle that cannot often be characterized accurately in terms of Scripture vs. tradition. Instead what we find are competing concepts of the relationship between Scripture and tradition." Ref-0791, pp. 19-20. "As already noted, we have broad scholarly agreement that Scripture and tradition were not mutually exclusive concepts in the mind of the early fathers. The concept of "tradition," when used by these fathers, is simply used to designate the body of doctrine which was committed to the Church by the Lord and His Apostles, whether through verbal or written communication. The body of doctrine, however, was essentially identical regardless of who it was communicated. No evidence suggests that the apostolic fathers believed they had recourse to any type of secret oral traditions. At this point in the Church's history, Scripture and tradition were coinherent concepts; "there was simply no way of imagining possible conflict between the Christian Scripture and the Christian tradition -- and, therefore, no necessity to choose between them." Ref-0791, p. 21. "Thus far the testimony of the early Church fathers regarding the question of authority is consistent. Scripture is the authority, but it must be interpreted according to the apostolic regula fidei. . . . Oberman terms this "single exegetical tradition of interpreted scripture 'Tradition I'." It is the view which was universally held for the first three centuries of the Church. During the fourth century, however, a transitional period began as several prominent fathers started to hint at a two-source concept of tradition." Ref-0791, p. 32. "[W]hether I or any one else should wish to detect the frauds and avoid the snares of heretics as they rise, and to continue sound and complete in the catholic faith, we must, the Lord helping, fortify our won belief in two ways; first by the authority of the Divine Law, and then, by the Tradition of the Catholic Church. But here some one perhaps will ask, Since the canon of Scripture is complete, and sufficient for itself for everything, and more than sufficient, what need is there to join with it the authority of the church's interpretation? For this reason -- because, owing to the depth of Holy Scripture, all do not accept it in one and the same sense, but one understands its words in one way, another in another; so that it seems to be capable of as many interpretations as there are interpreters. . . . Therefore, it is very necessary, on account of so great intricacies of such various error, that the rule for the right understanding of the prophets and apostles should be framed in accordance with the standard of Ecclesiastical and Catholic interpretation." -- Vincent of Lerins (d. ca. 450), Ref-0791, p. 43. "The Scripture was to be interpreted by the church and in the Church within the context of the regula fidei. If it was taken out of its apostolic context, it would inevitably be mishandled. Yet neither the church nor the regula fidei were considered second sources of revelation or equal authorities on par with Scripture. The Church was the interpreter and guardian of the Word of God, and the regula fidei was a summary of the apostolic preaching and the hermeneutical context of the Word of God. But only the Scripture was the Word of God. In other words, for the first three centuries, the Church held to the concept of tradition defined by Oberman as "Tradition I." Ref-0791, p. 48. "In the first question of the Summa Theologica, Aquinas writes, "Yet holy teaching employs such authorities [e.g., human reason, philosophy] only in order to provide as it were extraneous arguments from probability. Its own proper authorities are those of canonical Scripture, and these it applied with convincing force. It has other proper authorities, the doctors of the Church, and these it looks to as it sown, but for arguments that carry no more than probability. For our faith rests on the revelation made to the Prophets and Apostles who wrote the canonical books, not on a revelation, if such there be, made to any other teacher." Aquinas, it appears, stands in the line of Tradition I advocacy Scripture as the single source of revelation to be interpreted in and by the Church." Ref-0791, p. 77. "One debate that flared up again during the sixteenth-century Reformation concerned the source and norm of the Church's doctrine and practice. Oberman observes that, "traditionally this is described as the clash of the sola scriptura-principle with the Scripture and tradition-principle." This common misunderstanding continues to this day and is found in the words of both Protestant and Catholic scholars. Martin Luther and the Protestant Reformers are repeated portrayed as the inventors of an absolutely unheard of doctrine of scriptural authority. Yet this is demonstrably untrue. Unfortunately, endless repetition in the context of heated polemical debates seems to have caused an historically untenable proposition to be regarded as a fact. . . . In fact, the position the magisterial Reformers maintained was essentially that which was held in the early Church and throughout most of the medieval Church -- that Scripture was the sole source of revelation; that it was the final authoritative norm of doctrine and practice; that was to be interpreted in and by the church; and that it was to be interpreted according to the regular fidei. In other words, the case can be made that the Reformers adhered to Tradition I. . . . What we observe in the Reformation is not Scripture vs. tradition. Instead it is the inevitable clash between two mutually exclusive concepts of tradition: Tradition I and Tradition II. The Reformers strongly asserted the position termed Tradition I and in reaction Rom adopted, and eventually dogmatized, Tradition II.” Ref-0791, pp. 84-86. “Those who desire to maintain Tradition I (expressed by the Reformers in terms of sola scriptura) must fight a simultaneous battle for this precious truth on two fronts. One on one front, we must continue to reject any two-source theory of tradition such as that dogmatized by Rome at the council of Trent. Neither the older Roman doctrine of Tradition II nor the more recent doctrine of Tradition III has any real scriptural or patristic support. On the other hand, we must also adamantly reject the modern evangelical doctrine of Tradition 0. Anarchy is not the cure for tyranny. The autonomy of the individual is equally as dangerous as the autonomy of the pope or of the Church.” Ref-0791, pp. 152-153. “The fact that Scripture is the sole source of revelation today, and the fact that Scripture is the only inherently infallible and authoritative norm or standard does not imply that this standard is to be taken out of its ecclesiastical and historical context. Sola scriptura means “Scripture alone,” not “me alone.” Additionally, the meaning of the word “sola” in relation to “scriptura” is not absolute. It points to those characteristics that are unique to Scripture. It does not mean that Scripture is to be taken in isolation from the Church and the rule of faith.” Ref-0791, p. 305.

scripture - alone - tradition II : ☉ + “It is in the fourth century writings of Basil the Great that we find for the first time the suggestion “that the Christian owes equal respect and obedience to written and to unwritten ecclesiastical traditions, whether contained in canonical writings or in secret oral tradition handed down by the Apostles through their successors.”” Ref-0791, p. 33. “The evidence does, however, lend possible support to Oberman’s assertion that Augustine is one of the first, if not the first, Latin father to explicitly endorse a two-source concept of revelation.” Ref-0791, p. 42. “It is manifest that they [the Apostles] did not deliver all things by Epistle, but many things also unwritten, and in like manner both the one and the other are worthy of credit. Therefore let us thing the tradition of the Church also worthy of credit. It is a tradition, seek no farther.” John Chrysostom (ca. 347-407), Ref-0791, p. 39. “After briefly examining these important contextual issues, we will be able to see the medieval Church’s concept of the relationship between Scripture and tradition more directly. It will become clear that both Tradition I and Tradition II had their medieval adherents, although Tradition II doesn’t seriously begin to emerge until the twelfth century.” Ref-0791, p. 50. “The gradual abandonment of the allegorical method of scriptural interpretation had enormous repercussions for the Church. As we shall see in examining the medieval concept of tradition, many doctrines and practices of the Church were validated by appeals to nonliteral interpretation of Scripture. Once this method of interpretation began to be questioned, it became necessary to discover another foundation for these doctrines and practices. Thus, at the same general time the allegorical method of interpretation begins to decline, the two-source concept of tradition begins its ascendancy.” Ref-0791, pp. 67-68. “The work of the Franciscan William of Ockham marks a decisive turning point in the history of the doctrine of tradition. Because of the difficulty of his style, scholars have come to different conclusions about his views on this subject, but recent research indicates that he was one of the principle inspirers of Tradition II. He clearly embraces this position in his work, the Dialogue. . . . Ironically, like the historically unprecedented doctrine of papal infallibility, Tradition II originally finds its strongest support in the radical Franciscan enemies of the pope in the late thirteenth and early fourteenth century. Although not widely accepted during Ockham’s lifetime, his view of tradition would later prove to be useful to Rom. As Tierney observes, “In the course of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, Ockhams’ ‘two-sources’ theory of revelation came to be accepted as Catholic doctrine principally in order to refute the sola scriptura principle as it was presented by Wyclif and later by Luther.”” Ref-0791, p. 78-79. “On April 8, 1546, after much debate, the Council [of Trent] issued its answer to the Protestants. The decree concerning the Canonical Scriptures asserted, “. . . This [Gospel], of old promised through the Prophets in the Holy Scriptures, our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God promulgated first with His own mouth, and then commanded it to be preached by His Apostles to every creature as the source at once of all saving truth and rules of conduct. It also clearly perceives that these truths and rules are contained in the written books and in the unwritten traditions, which, received by the Apostles from the mouth of Christ Himself, or from the Apostles themselves, the Holy Ghost dictating, have come down to us, transmitted as it were from hand to hand. Following, then, the examples of the orthodox Fathers, it receives and venerates with a feeling of piety and reverence all the books both of the Old and New Testaments, since one God is the author of both; also the traditions, whether they relate to faith or to morals, as having been dictated either orally by Christ or by the Holy Ghost, and preserved in the Catholic Church in unbroken succession.” . . . As Oberman notes, “In short, the Council of Trent clearly admits that not all doctrinal truths are to be found in Holy Scripture. Tradition is seen as a second doctrinal source which does not ‘simply’ unfold the contents of Scripture as in Tradition I but adding its own substance complements Holy Scripture contentwise.”” Ref-0791, pp. 128-129,131-132. “A major problem, again, is that Rome has never been able to provide anyone with any complete and definite statement of what all of these necessary oral traditions are which she claims to have preserved. A second problem is that many individual doctrines and practices which she has declared to be preserved apostolic traditions cannot be found anywhere in the testimony of the church fathers.” Ref-0791, p. 172. “Theophilus had already received the apostolic tradition through oral instruction according to Luke (Luke 1:4). But this was deemed insufficient. Luke determines to gather all of the available information from all of the available reliable sources and put the oral tradition into writing. Luke tells Theophilus that compiling a complete and orderly account allows for more “certainty” regarding the tradition. Why? Because oral tradition is inherently unstable over any extended period of time and it cannot be independently verified if the one who originally gave the message is gone. When Luke wrote this gospel, most of the Apostles were still alive.” Ref-0791, p. 175. “. . . the concept of tradition as a second supplementary source of revelation faces other insurmountable problems. A good outline of these problems may be found in Charles Hodge’s nineteenth-century magnum opus, his three-volume Systematic Theology. In this work, he outlines eight major difficulties faced by the Roman Catholic concept of supplementary tradition.” Ref-0791, p. 211. “The fourth inherent problem with the supplementary view of tradition as a second standard of faith is the fact that it is inaccessible to God’s people. It is nowhere written in any volume to which all can turn. Instead, as Hodge notes, “it is scattered through the ecclesiastical records of eighteen centuries.” There is simply no way that most Christians could ever verify whether a particular tradition was actually taught throughout the entire history of the Church.” Ref-0791, p. 213. “The fact that Tradition II has been rejected by virtually every prominent Roman Catholic theologian seems to have escaped many of the more conservative Roman Catholic apologists who still write as if Tradition II remained the consensus within the Roman church.” Ref-0791, p. 216.

This doctrine, together with Cardinal Newman’s theory of doctrinal development, gradually led to the adoption of a completely new theory of tradition in which the magisterium of the Church is considered the one real source of revelation. This concept, termed Tradition III by Oberman, co-exists in the Roman Catholic church with the Tradition II concept.” Ref-0791, pp. 209-210.

Does it follow, then, that there must be a unanimity of opinion on infant baptism? . . . No, it does not. And why not? He owns a wonderful collection, with one Bible dating back to the fourth century. But my favorite is a Bible from sixteenth-century England, one of the earliest printed copies of God's Word. The top third of this Bible is covered with the blood of its original owner. My friend let me hold it in my hands, and tears came to my eyes as I leafed through it. How did blood get on the pages of that Bible? When Bloody Mary ruled England, she terrorized Protestants, murdering as many as she could. Her soldiers would spill the person's blood, then take his bible and dip it deep into the blood. A few of those Bibles have been preserved and are known as Martyrs' Bibles. Scientists have tested the paper and confirmed that the dark stains on every page of my friend's Bible are human blood. I examined that Bible carefully, page by page. I could see where it was well worn from being studied. There are water stains, as if from tears, and places where a thumb had frayed favorite pages. This was someone's most valuable possession, and his or her blood is there to prove it." John MacArthur, The Sufficiency of Scripture, Ref-0164, Vol. 15 No. 2, Fall 2004, 165:174, p. 173.

We believe there is evidence that the Pentateuch in its entirety was written from the beginning, even though that is dismissed by most scholars today. . . . I believe this is similar to the way the king of Tyre is addressed in Ezek 28:1-19 followed by an oracle against Lucifer, the anointed cherub, as the power behind the throne (cf. Ezek 28:11-19), yet with no textual indication of a change of addressee." Ref-1272, pp. 137-138. Ref-1272, p. 137. "Nevertheless, this curse [Gen 3:14] should not be understood as changing the actual physical condition of all snakes but more likely declaring the meaning of their normal characteristics. Thus, when God proclaimed that the serpent would crawl on its belly, it does not mean that serpents previously had legs. Rather, crawling would now forever be understood as a sign of defeat. . . . Unlike the rest of creation, when the effects of the fall are reversed, the curse on the serpent will remain forever [Isa 65:25]. In this way, the serpent will remain an eternal outward symbol of the spiritual defeat of the dark force behind the fall." Ref-1272, p. 138, 138n39. Questionable: Jer. 31:22 (?); Tit. 1:2 (?);

At that time, five of the nation’s fourteen states (Vermont joined the Union in 1791) provided for tax support of ministers, and those five plus seven others maintained religious tests for state office. Only Virginia and Rhode Island enjoyed the sort of “separation of church and state” that Americans now take for granted—government providing no tax money for churches and posing no religious conditions for participation in public life. Varner, “Do We Need Messianic Synagogues?”, Ref-0164, 14/1 (2003):47-62(54). “The reader of Acts will remember that on Paul’s last visit to Jerusalem, a riot arose in the temple because the rumour got around that he had polluted the sacred precincts by taking Gentiles into them. Gentiles might enter the outer court, which was not really part of the temple buildings proper; but they might not penetrate farther on pain of death. . . . That none might plead ignorance of the rule, notices in Greek and Latin were fastened to the barricade separated the outer from the inner courts, warning Gentiles that death was the penalty for trespass. One of these Greek inscriptions, found in Jerusalem in 1871 by C. S. Clermont-Ganneau, is now housed in Istanbul, and reads as follows: “No foreigner may enter within the barricade which surrounds the Temple and enclosure. Anyone who is caught doing so will have himself to thank for his ensuing death.” When Paul wrote in Ephesians 2:14 of ‘the middle wall of partition’ between Jew and Gentile which is broken down in Christ, it has been thought that his metaphor was drawn from this temple barrier, which forbade Gentiles to trespass on ground reserved for Jews alone.” Ref-0239, pp. 94-95. “Within the confines of the platform was the temple structure itself. It was surrounded by a low wall warning Gentiles to go no further⁵. Three open-air divisions lay within the temple, the Court of the Women, the Court of Israel (of the Men), and the Court of the Priests. Sacrifices and other acts of worship were conducted in the last-named area. [8] Josephus mentions this wall in Jewish Wars 5.5.2 (193-94); 6.2.4 (124-26); Antiquities 15.11.5 (417). Septuagint - Christian use of : ☩ “For the Church did not, in spite of the breach with Judaism, repudiate the authority of the Old Testament, but, following the example of Christ and His apostles, received it as the Word of God. Indeed, so much did they make the Septuagint their own that, although it was originally a translation of the Hebrew Scriptures into Greek for Greek-speaking Jews before the time of Christ, the Jews left the Septuagint to the Christians, and a fresh Greek version of the Old Testament was made for Greek-speaking Jews.” Ref-0239, p. 21. “From a Bible honoring frame of reference, there is strong internal evidence that challenges the authenticity of the existence of a pre-Christian era Septuagint or, more precisely, if such an entity had existed Jesus and His apostles did not use it. That is, there are various references in the New Testament which clearly demonstrate that the Lord Jesus referred to the Hebrew Old Testament rather than to the Greek LXX or any other version.” Ref-0186, p. 15. “What is abundantly clear is that if such an entity existed, it does not necessarily follow that it read anything like the LXX preserved for us today. That is, the one at our disposal represents a very corrupted form of the LXX of their day. This is especially true if in fact the Apostles and the early church made extensive use of it as we are so often assured by nearly all theologians, for it flagrantly contradicts the Hebrew.” Ref-0186, p. 17. “In addressing the question as to whether there had been a pre-Christian era Septuagint and whether the Apostles actually cited Scripture from it, Terence Brown - who was for some years Secretary of the Trinitarian Bible Society of London, England and a scholar in his own right - took a Bible-honoring frame of reference (quoted from Moorman’s, Forever Settled, op. cit., p. 16). Brown comments: “. . . if we observe the manner in which the Apostles refer to the Old Testament Scripture, we see a striking indication of the inspiration under which they themselves wrote. When they referred to the Septuagint, they were doing so under the supernatural guidance of the Holy Spirit, the Divine Author of the original revelation. Their authority is therefore higher than that of a translator.” This would have been even more especially true since there is not the slightest indication that God had called for the undertaking or in any way sanctioned the translation in question. Brown continues: “This higher authority would be manifested in three ways. Firstly, where the LXX translators were correct, the Apostles would quote verbally and literally from the Septuagint, and thus remind their readers of the Scriptures with which they were already familiar in that particular form. Secondly, where the LXX is incorrect, the Apostles amend it, and make their quotations according to the Hebrew, translating it anew into Greek, and improving upon the defective rendering. Thirdly, when it was the purpose of the Holy Spirit to point out more clearly in what sense the quotations from the Old Testament Scriptures were to be understood the Apostles were guided to restate the revealed truth more fully or explicitly. By the hands of the Apostles, the Holy Spirit thus delivers again His own inspired message, in order to make more clear to later generations what had been formerly declared through the prophets in an earlier age. By giving again the old truth in new words, the Holy Ghost infallibly imparted teaching which lay hidden in the Old, but which could only be fully understood by a later generation if given in a different form.”” Ref-0186, p. 17n2. An inconsistency with the former position of Mr. Brown is found in asking how God was providentially preserved His word for the Apostle’s generation if the “familiar” (predominant) translation in use at that time was the Septuagint which is so flawed? “It is generally asserted that the LXX was the “Bible” actually used by the Lord Jesus and the Apostles and that Christ Jesus and the Apostles quoted from the Greek version at times in preference to the Hebrew Bible. However one cannot even be certain that the LXX which is extant today (c.350 A.D.) represents a faithful reproduction of the c.260 B.C. original, if such a translation ever existed before the time of Christ. The irrefutable fact is that the divine oracles of the Old Testament were given to the Jews and the Jews only to both write and preserve (Rom. 3:1-3), never to the Greeks. It is therefore the Hebrew writing that is the true infallible Word of the Living God. The devastating and unanswerable question for the supporters of today’s LXX is: if the Savior, the apostles and the early church used the Septuagint for their Bible, why would the true believers have ever left it and why did they return to the Hebrew Test? The answer is obvious, they would never have done so.

Furthermore, why are not the early translations simply rife with readings from the LXX, moreover nearly word for word the same? Since these early works are not so constructed, it follows that if the translators of these early versions did use a Greek Old Testament, it was certainly not the one containing the many perverted readings which we have today." Ref-0186, p. 19. "The LXX was the Bible for most writers of the NT. Not only did they take from it most of their express citations of Scripture, but their writings ? in particular the Gospels, and among them especially Luke ? contain numerous reminiscences of its language. The theological terms of the NT, such as "law," "righteousness," "mercy," "truth," "propitiation," were taken over directly from the LXX and must be understood in the light of their use in that version (cf. C. H. Dodd, Bible and the Greeks [1935]; D. Hill, Greek Words and Hebrew Meanings [1967])." S. K. Soderlund, Septuagint, Ref-0008, p. 4:400. . . the doctrines of orthodox Christianity were hammered out with exegetical appeals to an Old Testament that was written in Greek, not Hebrew. While no point of orthodox Christian doctrine rests on the Greek text in contradiction to the Hebrew, it is also true that the Septuagint text was the Word of God for the church in its first three centuries. Moreover, the Eastern Orthodox churches--Greek, Russian, and Syrian--inherited the Greek text as their Bible." Ref-0838, p. 25. "The LXX has also vitally influenced the titles, order, and number of books in the Christian OT canons (Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Greek Orthodox). Several of the familiar titles of OT books ? especially those of the Pentateuch ? derive from the LXX rather than from the Hebrew. Likewise, the standard order of books in the Christian OT is largely a Greek rather than a Hebrew inheritance. Although it must be emphasized that the LXX MSS and the patristic and synodical lists seldom arrange the books identically (see the lists in Swete, intro, pp. 201-214), in essence the Hebrew threefold division of Law, Prophets, and Writings was replaced with the Greek fourfold division of Law, History, Poetry, and Prophets, which is apparently based on literary character and chronological sequence. Modern printed editions of the LXX follow (with slight variations) the order of books found in Codex Vaticanus. The same pattern is basically adopted in the Bibles of Western Christendom, although with certain further modifications, e.g., the Minor Prophets follow rather than precede ? as in the LXX ? the Major Prophets." S. K. Soderlund, Ref-0008, p. 4:400. "In any case, the Bible in Greek was widely used by Greek-speaking Jews, but evidently not highly regarded by some of the more strict Jews in the land of Israel. Most early Christians adopted the Greek Scriptures as their own. By the second century A.D., Jewish scholars produced their own editions in reaction to the Christians' use of the Greek Old Testament. These editions sought to correct apparent mistranslations used by the Christians in promoting their faith and generally to conform the Greek to the Hebrew text that was most widely used in the land of Israel." Ref-1200, p. 134. "As Christianity moved out of a strictly Jewish environment, the Septuagint became the Bible of the early church. Further, it was through this channel that the Apocrypha became a part of the debates about the canon of Scripture." Ref-1200, pp. 135-136. "The quotations in the N. T. from the O. T. show the use of the LXX more frequently than the Hebrew, sometimes the text quoted in the Synoptics is more like that of A than B, sometimes more like Theodotion than the LXX.2 In the Synoptic Gospels the quotations, with the exception of five in Matthew which are more like the Hebrew, closely follow the LXX. In John the LXX is either quoted or a free rendering of the Hebrew is made. The Acts quotes from the LXX exclusively. The Catholic Epistles use the LXX. The Epistle to the Hebrews "is in great part a catena of quotations from the LXX."3 In Paul's Epistles more than half of the direct quotations follow the LXX. Here also the text of A is followed more often than the text of B. Swete even thinks that the literary form of the N. T. would have been very different but for the LXX. The Apocalypse indeed does not formally quote the O. T., but it is a mass of allusions to the LXX text. It is not certain that the LXX was used in the synagogues of Galilee and Judea, but it is clear that Peter, James, Matthew and Mark, Jewish writers, quote it, and that they represent Jesus as using it. In the Hellenistic synagogues of Jerusalem it would certainly be read." Ref-1236, pp. 99-100. "The only Bible known to most of the Jews in the world in the first Christian century was the LXX. The first complete Bible was the Greek Bible. The LXX was the "first Apostle to the Gentiles" and was freely used for many centuries by the Christians." Ref-1236, p. 102.

Septuagint - chronology - problems : Gen. 5:25; 2K. 8:25; 2K. 9:29 ✧ "One point where the LXX and the Hebrew Text differ in the Pentateuch is with regard to the ages of the Ante-diluvian Patriarchs relevant to the birth of their sons. . . . It is simple to demonstrate which list is correct. The majority of LXX manuscripts give 167 as the age of Methuselah at the birth of his son, Lamech (the Hebrew reads 187, Gen. 5:25). However, if Methuselah were 167 at the birth of Lamech, Lamech 188 at the birth of Noah, and Noah 600 at the Flood (as recorded in the LXX), Methuselah would have been 955 at the date of the Flood. Since he lived to be 969 (the life span given in both) the LXX becomes entangled in the absurdity of making Methuselah survive the Flood by 14 years! Yet Genesis 7-10 and 2 Peter 3:20 are adamant in proclaiming that only Noah, his three sons and their wives; that is, only 8 souls survived the Deluge." Ref-0186, pp. 12-13. "The LXX translators attempted to harmonize various readings of the Hebrew that seemed to be contradictory, and in doing so, they produced various readings that cannot be assembled into a coherent chronology without postulating multiple arbitrary emendations. See Edwin Thiele, Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings, 3d ed. (Grand Rapids: Zondervan/Kregel, 1983) 89-94., for a discussion of the unreliability of the LXX in chronological matters. For an example of the emendations and assumptions that are necessary when trying to use the various texts of the LXX traditions, see M. Christine Tetley, The Reconstructed Chronology of the Divided Kingdom (Winona Lake, Ind.: Eisenbrauns, 2005) chap. 2." Rodger C. Young, Inductive and Deductive Methods as Applies to OT Chronology, Ref-0164, Vol. 18 No. 1 Spring 2007, 99:116, p. 103n15. ". . . devout Jews who translated the Old Testament into Greek in the immediately pre-Christian centuries . . . altered the dates given in the Hebrew text, apparently in an effort to smooth out the supposed inconsistencies. Josephus, writing in the first century of our era, did the same, though with results different from those of the Greek translation." Ref-0839, p. 28. "The Septuagint was at that time translated from the Hebrew. It contains a number of striking variations from the chronological data in the Masoretic Text, variations that were introduced to make possible a more harmonious pattern of the lengths of the Hebrew kings' reigns and the synchronisms." Ref-0839, p. 39. "Still another indication was the double synchronism for the accession of Ahaziah, given in one place as the eleventh year of Joram of Israel (2K. 9:29) and in another place as his twelfth year (2K. 8:25). Here we have the interesting possibility of one scribe continuing to give the year of Ahaziah's accession according to the old accession-year system, the eleventh year of Joram, and another given it according to the newly adopted nonaccession-year method, Joram's twelfth year. The valuable clue to this change found in the Masoretic Text of 2 Kings 8:25 has been lost in the Lucian (Greek) text, whose editor changed the "12" to an "11" to correspond to 2 Kings 9:29." Ref-0839, p. 58. "Wide divergencies from the Masoretic Text in the regnal data of the Septuagint and the Lucianic recension show that misunderstandings concerning dual-dating procedure already prevailed in the pre-Christian centuries. Since evidence shows that many Greek variants go back to still earlier Hebrew Vorlagen (manuscripts that are the basis of later material), the variant numbers found in the Greek in all likelihood go back to very early Hebrew manuscripts from which the Greek translations were made." Ref-0839, p. 62. For a more detailed discussion of the Greek vs. the Masoretic Text, see Ref-0839, pp. 89-94. "It must not be thought that all the variations in the Septuagint were the original productions of those who first translated Kings from Hebrew into Greek in the third century B.C., for they would have been found in some earlier Hebrew text not now extant. [Presents list of variant numbers between LXX and MT.] A careful study of these variations reveals that they are not the result of scribal errors but constitute editorial changes made with the object of correcting what were regarded as errors in the early Hebrew text." Ref-0839, p. 209. . . . " . . . it is interesting to note the specific details of the struggles early students of the Old Testament were having with the data of the Hebrew kings only a few centuries after the kingdoms had ended and very shortly after the Old Testament canon had been brought into being. In no instance is a Greek variation an improvement over the Hebrew. The fallacies of the Greek innovations may be proved by the wide divergence of the patterns of reigns they call for from the years of contemporary chronology." Ref-0839, p. 210. "Eusebius notices that there are differences in the figures in the Hebrew, Septuagint, and Samaritan

texts. In general, he things that mistakes and inconsistencies are evident in the extant Hebrew text and that the Septuagint was translated from ancient and accurate copies of the Hebrew text and was therefore to be preferred. The Septuagint text used by Eusebius must have differed from that available now, however, as may be noted for example in its omission of Elon in the list of Judges. From Adam to the flood the figures given by the several texts are: LXX--2,242 years; Hebrew--1,656 years; Samaritan--1,307 years. . . . From the flood to Abraham, . . . the several texts give these figures: LXX-942; Hebrew--292; Samaritan--942. . . . The several totals from Adam to Abraham are therefore: LXX--3,184; Hebrew--1,948; and Samaritan--2,249." Ref-0840, p. 169. ". . . there were at least three systems of biblical chronology in the main biblical texts of the last few centuries B.C., namely, those of the Hebrew text, which was later standardized by the Masoretes and is normally translated in modern Bibles (the MT); that of the Septuagint, which was the Bible used in Egypt (the LXX); and that of the Hebrew Pentateuch preserved by the Samaritans. A comparative study of these concludes that the system found in the MT is original as compared with the Septuagint and that the differences in the LXX are rational alterations at points when the chronology in the MT is difficult to understand or appears to be self-contradictory; while the Samaritan system mainly follows the MT until the flood and then the LXX although with several modifications." Ref-0840, p. 195. For a comparison of chronological data from Adam to Abraham for the MT and LXX, see Ref-0840, p. 195. "That the variations in the Septuagint are due to contrivance or design, and not due to accident, is plain from the systematic way in which the alterations have been made. It is simple to demonstrate which list is correct. The majority of LXX manuscripts give 167 as the age of Methuselah at the birth of his son, Lamech (the Hebrew reads 187, Gen. 5:25). However, if Methuselah were 167 at the birth of Lamech, Lamech 188 at the birth of Noah, and Noah 600 at the Flood (as recorded in the LXX), Methuselah would have been 955 at the date of the Flood. Since he lived to be 969 (the life span given in both) the LXX becomes entangled in the absurdity of making Methuselah survive the Flood by 14 years! Yet Genesis 7-10 and II Peter 3:20 are adamant in proclaiming that only Noah, his three sons and their wives; that is, only 8 souls survived the Deluge. Discordances of a similar nature and magnitude are found with regard to the Post-diluvian Patriarchs except that here the life spans also differ, often by more than 100 years. The Patriarchal chronology of the LXX can be explained from the Hebrew on the principle that the translators of the former desired to lengthen the chronology and to graduate the length of the lives of those who lived after the Flood so as to make the shortening of the life spans gradual and continuous, instead of sudden and abrupt. This fit into their philosophic concept of gradual and uniform change (pre "Uniformitarianism"), which philosophy embraced the basic precepts of evolution. That is, they were primeval evolutionists. Thus, the dramatic life span changes, which manifested the historic results of the sudden catastrophic transformations upon the earth and all life due to the worldwide Deluge, were altered to eliminate such positive evidence which was contrary to their religious-philosophic beliefs. The constructor of the scheme lengthens the chronology of the Patriarchs after the Flood unto Abraham's leaving Haran by 720 years. He also graduates the length of the lives of the Patriarchs throughout the entire register, both those before and after the Flood. The curious result is that with the three exceptions of Enoch, Cainan (whose life exceeds that of his father by only 5 years) and Reu (whose age at death is the same as that of his father), every one of the Patriarchs from Adam to Abraham is made to die a few years younger than his father. Could anything be more manifestly artificial?" Ref-0186, p. 13. "Thus, the interval from Creation to Abraham is 1306 years longer in the LXX than in the Hebrew." Ref-0186, p. 20. "That the principal divergences of both texts [LXX and Samaritan Pentateuch] from the Hebrew are intentional changes, based upon chronological theories or cycles, is sufficiently evident from their internal character, viz., from the improbability of the statement, that whereas the average duration of life after the flood was about half the length that it was before, the time of life at which the fathers begot their first-born after the flood was as late, and, according to the Samaritan text, generally later than it had been before. No such intention is discernible in the numbers of the Hebrew text; consequently every attack upon the historical character of its numerical statements has entirely failed, and no tenable argument can be adduced against their correctness." [Eze 32:1] 19) Ezekiel's vision of Israel was in the 12th year, 12th month and the 15th day of Jehoiachin's captivity. The 12th month was supplied from the context. The LXX incorrectly had the 1st month. [Eze 32:1,17] 20) Ezekiel told of the destruction of Jerusalem in the 12th year, 10th month and the 5th day of Jehoiachin's captivity. The LXX had the 10th year and 12th month which is an obvious transposition error. [Eze 33:21] 21) In the 23rd year of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan deported 730 of the remaining Jews. The LXX omitted this verse. [Jer 52:30] 22) Ezekiel's vision of the temple was in the 25th year, 1st month and the 10th day of Jehoiachin's captivity, in the 14th year after Jerusalem fell. The LXX correctly supplies "1st month" which was not in the Hebrew text but was clearly implied. [Eze 40:1] Of the 22 differences, seven are critical. 1,3,4,5,7,8 and 9 would throw the chronology off if the LXX was used instead of the Hebrew text. Hence our admonition is justified that the chronology must be based on the Hebrew text." Larry Pierce, "Appendix C: Ussher's Timeline for the Divided Kingdom", Ref-0222, p. C:22. Septuagint - Greek - Koine : ☪ + "What then can be said about the Greek of the LXX as a whole? In the first place, it may be described as Hellenistic Greek. The term Hellenistic is not always used in precisely the same way by all scholars. Classicists, for example, employ it primarily as a chronological label, bracketing the period from Alexander the Great's conquests to the establishment of the Roman Empire. Biblical scholars tend to use the label Hellenistic Greek broadly, more or less equivalent to Koine (Common) Greek, that is, a particular form of the language that contrasted with the many different dialects characterizing the earlier classical period." Ref-0838, p. 106.

Septuagint - Hebrew - differences : ☪ + There is an inherent tension in deciding whether variations should be attributed to an underlying Hebrew text which differs from the MT, or whether the variation came about due to the work of the translator. "Although each reading must be judged individually, the modern scholar will typically approach the differences between the Greek and Hebrew versions with a general preference toward one explanation or the other. Certain scholars tend to argue that a given Greek reading is certainly due to the translator's technique. Other scholars argue with equal enthusiasm that the same reading is due to a variant Hebrew text. The tension between these two opposing solutions constitutes what is perhaps the weightiest problem in Septuagint scholarship." Ref-0838, p. 90. "With frustrating frequency, even the most capable scholar will be unable to decide with certainty whether a given reading in the Greek is due to a variant parent text or to the work of the translator. Generally speaking, if a difference between the Hebrew and Greek can be easily explained by one of the several frequent types of mechanical errors scribes were known to make in copying the texts, that explanation is to be preferred over translation technique or literary creativity. On the other hand, if the difference is consistent with the translator's method of work, as evidenced in the book as a whole, then one would need weighty reasons to posit a variant parent text." Ref-0838, p. 150. "Generally speaking, the MT can be shown to reflect a text superior to that of the LXX's parent text, meaning that in a majority of demonstrable cases, the readings of the LXX appear to be secondary." Ref-0838, pp. 153-154. "The few Qumran texts that differ from the MT have deservedly received much scholarly attention. However, only about 5% of the Qumran manuscripts could be argued to reflect a Hebrew text-type close to the LXX. About 40% of the Hebrew biblical texts from Qumran contain the consonantal text of the MT. [24] It is clear from the Hebrew texts found at Qumran that the MT, on which modern English translations of the OT are based, is indeed an ancient text that was already stable before the time of Jesus. . . . But the discoveries in the Judean Desert also show that the Hebrew text that has come down to us in the MT was not the only Hebrew edition of at least some of the books. [24] - In Textual Criticism of the Hebrew Bible, 115, Tov specifies 60%, but has since revised his estimate; see his recent and important article, "The Significance of the Texts from the Judean Desert for the History of the Text of the Hebrew Bible: A New Synthesis," in Qumran between the Old and New Testaments. . . ." Septuagint - inspiration - Orthodox Church :

☩ + "Today's Eastern Orthodox churches, such as the Greek, Russian, and Syrian, inherited the Greek text as their Bible. Traditionally, the Orthodox churches have treated the Greek version as divinely inspired, although this issue is a matter of some debate among Orthodox scholars today. Those who hold to the inspiration of the Greek translation understand it to have superseded the Hebrew. . . . In his general introduction to Eastern Orthodoxy, Timothy Ware explains this viewpoint: The Orthodox Church has the same New Testament as the rest of Christendom. As its authoritative text for the Old Testament, it uses the ancient Greek translation known as the Septuagint. When this differs from the original Hebrew (which happens quite often), Orthodox [Christians] believe that the changes in the Septuagint were made under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and are to be accepted as part of God's continuing revelation." Septuagint - Jerome's view : ☩ + "His cry was that the Hebrew text should receive primacy as the text closest to the autographs, and the most authoritative text. Like Origen before him, he saw clearly the discrepancies in the LXX. With much controversy, the scholar from Bethlehem worked diligently to translate a new version into Latin directly from the Hebrew, and in so doing bypassed the LXX altogether." Scott Lanser and Erich D. Schwartz, "The Red Sea in the NT", Ref-0066, 21.1 2008, 3:11, p. 7.

Septuagint - Jewish distrust : ☩ + "The scrutiny of the texts that occurred when the Septuagint was adopted as Scripture by the Christians highlighted the differences of the Greek texts in circulation from the Hebrew text that had become the standard in Judaism. In the second century, most Jews became distrustful of the Septuagint. As discussed in chapter 1, Aquila made a new Greek translation faithful to the standardized Hebrew text, and this version continued to be used in Greek-speaking synagogues until at least the sixth century. The Jewish scholars who produced the Talmud and other rabbinic writings, however, worked on the basis of the Hebrew text, with only passing references to the existence of Greek versions. The Greek versions have virtually no place in modern Jewish worship, although they had occupied a very prominent place in the lives of Jews of the Hellenistic period. In effect, by the end of the second century the Septuagint had passed into the care and keeping of the Christian church." Ref-0838, p. 83. "[Robert A Kraft] concludes that while isolated examples [of Christian modifications to the Septuagint text]. . . may be found in the LXX corpus, overall little evidence is found of distinctively Christian theology being imposed on the Greek text of the OT as it was copied and preserved by Christians." Septuagint - Josephus ignores : ☩ + ". . . though his work contains about 8 discordances with the Hebrew Masoretic Text (7 of which are very small), none of Josephus' variations is the same as any found in the Septuagint. We submit that this indicates that: 1. Josephus did not consider the LXX reliable, or 2. The LXX did not exist in his day! Either is devastating to the position to which the LXX has somehow ascended in the minds of most scholars. . . . To attempt to reconstruct the Hebrew Text (as many connected with the modern versions are trying to do) from such a loose, deficient and unacceptable translation would be analogous to trying to reconstruct the Greek New Testament from The Living Bible." Septuagint - manuscripts - fragmentary : ☩ + "The term Septuagint, which has been used in a confusing variety of ways, gives the inaccurate impression that the document is a homogeneous unit. Ref-0838, p. 29. "While the advent of modern printing technology stabilized the printed editions of the Bible, giving the appearance of homogeneity, the particular version it preserved and propagated was in fact an arbitrary amalgam of texts with various pedigrees and characteristics. The first printed edition of the entire Greek Old Testament was produced by Christian scholars in Spain between 1514 and 1517, then published a few years later, as part of the Complutensian Polyglot Bible." Septuagint - meaning : ☩ + "When one enters the highly specialized world of textual criticism, the name Septuagint takes on a more precise and technical sense. It may be used specifically to distinguish the oldest Greek translation from subsequent translations and revisions of the Greek. If the term is used in this narrower sense, it refers only to the original Greek version of the Pentateuch, for that was the first part of the Hebrew Bible translated in the third century B.C.E. The remaining books of the Hebrew canon were translated by different people in different places during the next two centuries." Ref-0838, pp. 31-32.

Septuagint - name - origin : ☩ + "We have no evidence that any Greek version of the Hebrew Bible, or even of the Pentateuch, was called the "Septuagint" prior to the second century of this era. The word came into English from Latin Septuaginta ("seventy"), a shortened form of the title Interpretatio septuaginta virorum: "The Translation of the Seventy Men." This title arose from the Greek word for "the seventy" (hoi hebdomēkonta), which had been used by second-century Christian writers to refer to the entire Greek Old Testament, even though only the first five books were traditionally said to have been produced by seventy (either a round figure or an abbreviation for seventy-two) translators in Alexandria, Egypt, in the third century B.C.E. These circumstances also explain why the Septuagint is commonly abbreviated today with the Roman numeral for seventy, LXX." Ref-0838, pp. 32-33. "Because the Greek letter omicron is used to represent the numeral 70, the Septuagint (or Old Greek) is often referred to with the abbreviation οἰ ό or simply ό." Ref-0838, p. 33n5.

Septuagint - pronunciation : ☩ + "The "proper" way to pronounce Septuagint is the subject of lighthearted debate among specialists. English dictionaries typically suggest the pronunciation SEP-too-a-jint or sep-TOO-a-jint or the like, but many scholars in the discipline treat it as a three-syllable word, SEP-twa-jint. In Europe, one often hears the last syllable pronounced with hard g, after the patter of Latin Septuaginta." Ref-0838, p. 19.

Septuagint - quotation by N.T. : ☩ + "An analysis of these quotations will demonstrate, however, that the text of the LXX is followed only where it presents the full truth, that the LXX rendering is changed freely when correction is necessary. . . the Holy Spirit evidently guided the . . . quotation. Gausson quotes the findings of Horne as follows: 'That learned author reckons eighty-eight verbal quotations that agree with the Alexandrine translations; sixty-four more that are borrowed from them, but with variations; thirty-seven that adopt the same meaning with them without employing their words; sixteen that differ from them in order to agree more nearly with the Hebrew; and . . . twenty that differ from both the Hebrew and Septuagint, but in which the sacred authors have paraphrased the Old Testament, in order that the sense in which they quote it may be better understood.'" Ref-0019, p. 69. "It's important not to overstate the LXX's influence on the OT: Jesus clearly cites the OT 64 times in the Synoptics -- Matthew, Mark, and Luke (there are many more allusions, of course). Of these: * More than half (32+) agree with both the LXX and the MT (simply because the LXX is a good translation of the MT in most cases), * One-fifth of the 64 differ from both the LXX and the MT, * One-fifth of the 64 agree with the MT against the MT, * The rest agree with the LXX against the MT, but we have a couple of verses where we see different versions of the LXX itself! (For example, Mark 13:25 versus Mark 9:48)." Ref-0232, p. 288. "Around the middle of the nineteenth century . . . a writer by the name of D. M. Turpie made an extensive study of 275 NT passages and concluded that the NT, the LXX and the Hebrew text all agree in only about 20% of the quotations. Of the 80% where some disagreement occurs, less than 5% agree with the Hebrew against the LXX, while about a third of the quotations agree with the LXX against the Hebrew. Although other scholars give somewhat different figures, these proportions indicate how heavily the NT writers used the Greek version of the OT. The remaining quotations agree with neither the Hebrew nor the LXX, so the NT authors must have either paraphrased the passages or perhaps used a variant Greek text that has not survived." Ref-0838, p. 189. "Robert Gundry's work on the use of the OT in Matthew shows that this is indeed an intricate problem that eludes easy generalizations. Of approximately eighty formal and allusive quotations of the OT in this Gospel, about thirty clearly follow the LXX reading, and most of these instances happen to be in the direct speech of Jesus and John the Baptist. Of particular interest are cases when the Gospel writers have Jesus quoting the Greek version even though it differs in substance from the original Hebrew. For the point the evangelist is making, the LXX form is often more suitable than a literal translation of the Hebrew." Ref-0838, pp. 193-194.

quoted Isaiah 61:1. While this citation is textually complicated, one thing is certain: the LXX phrase "recovering sight to the blind" is used instead of the Hebrew reading, "opening of the prison to those who are bound." The LXX reading was consistent with the healing miracles Jesus was performing. Did Jesus himself quote LXX Isaiah 61 to give prophetic fulfillment to his healing of the blind? Or did Luke see that the Greek reading was more appropriate to Jesus' ministry than the Hebrew reading? Or did Luke perhaps use LXX Isaiah simply because it was the only version of Isaiah he could read, and thus he was unaware that it was more apt than the Hebrew?" Ref-0838, p. 194. Concerning Stephen's use of Amos 9:11-12 in Acts 15:13-18, see Ref-0838, p. 194. ". . . when Paul describes the law as having been ordained through angels (Galatians 3:19; cf. The Hebrew text does not have the word אַלְמַנָּה at all, and the last clause is very problematic." Ref-0838, pp. 199-200. Septuagint - Rahlfs's : ☩ + "Work on a full critical edition [of the Septuagint] had to be postponed because of the First World War and its aftermath, but Rahlfs undertook the production of a provisional critical edition, which appeared just before his death in 1935. His text is based primarily on the three great uncials--Vaticanus, Sinaiticus, and Alexandrinus--but many other sources were used extensively. Rahlfs's edition, in spite of its provisional character; has since been regarded as the standard Septuagint text, even though for many books of the Bible it has now been superseded by individual volumes of the larger project, often referred to as "the Göttingen Septuagint." Ref-0838, p. 75.

Septuagint - translation - Aquila : ☩ + "According to ancient testimony, Aquila was a Gentile who had been commissioned by his relative, the Roman emperor Hadrian, to superintend the rebuilding of Jerusalem (renamed Aelia Capitolina) around the year 128 C.E. While there, he became a Christian, but later converted to Judaism and studied under prominent rabbis. Aquila eventually undertook a new Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible that (a) was based on the recently standardized Hebrew text; (b) sought to correct perceived deficiencies in the Septuagint, including those that affected Jewish-Christian disputes; and (c) adopted a very literalistic approach that possibly reflected certain rabbinic methods of interpretation. . . . The literal character of Acquila's translation have not always been adequately understood. Some scholars give the impression that Aquila was either incompetent or eccentric, but the facts suggest otherwise." Ref-0838, pp. 38-39.

Septuagint - translation - Lucian : ☩ + "Lucian of Antioch, born in Syria about the middle of the third century, died as a martyr in the year 312. He was a controversial theologian and an influential biblical scholar. While the specific extent and nature of his textual work remain uncertain, he apparently updated an existing Greek text [a work of rescension] of both the Old and New Testaments. His revisions seem to have been primarily stylistic in nature." Ref-0838, pp. 53-54.

Septuagint - translation - Symmachus : ☩ + "Little is known about the origins of the Greek version attributed to Symmachus. He is said by some sources to have been an Ebionite Christian who produced his translation around the year 170 of our era. A major recent study identifies Symmachus as a Jew (not an Ebionite) who undertook this task around the year 200 for the Jewish community in Caesarea of Palestine." Ref-0838, p. 40.

Septuagint - translation - Theodotion : ☩ + "According to the traditional view, Theodotion was a convert to Judaism who lived in Ephesus in the late second century. Taking the existing Greek version as his base, he revised it toward the standard Hebrew text. His work--which may fairly be characterized as literal, but not excessively so--includes features reminiscent of Aquila. One peculiarity is his penchant for transliteration (i.e., using Greek letters to represent the sound of Hebrew) rather than translating certain words, such as the names for animals and plants. His translation of the Book of Daniel supplanted that of the Septuagint (better, the Old Greek) which was widely regarded as defective. [Specifically, all but two surviving manuscripts have Theodotion's translation, not the Old Greek, for Daniel. The exceptions are manuscripts 88 (11th century) and 967 (a second-century papyrus that is part of the Chester Beatty collection discovered in 1931).] One of the problems with this description is that certain renderings once thought distinctive to Theodotion are now known to have existed a century or two before he lived. . . . Also debated is the question of Daniel-Theodotion in particular. Some argue that the characteristics of this translation do not fit those found in materials otherwise attributed to Theodotion. Moreover, doubts have been raised about the usual view that Daniel-Theodotion is a revision of the Old Greek. These and other questions will continue to occupy scholars for years to come." Ref-0838, p. 41-42.

Septuagint - versification : Ps. 1:1; Ps. 10:1 ☩ + "Chapter and verse divisions developed over the centuries in a less-than systematic fashion, resulting in inconsistencies among the various traditions. Within individual books, the chapter-and-verse numbering of the Septuagint sometimes differs from what we find in English Bibles. In the case of the Book of Psalms, it is mainly a matter of remembering two details. (a) The Septuagint, followed by the Vulgate and Roman Catholic Bibles, treats Psalms 9 and 10 as a single psalm, while Psalm 147 is divided into two psalms: 146 and 147. This means that the chapter numbering is off by one from Psalm 10 to 147, with Psalms 1-8 and 148-50 being the same in both traditions. (b) As in the Hebrew, the titles of the Psalms are given a verse number, which means that verse numbers are usually off by one in comparison with English Bibles. Thus, for example, Psalm 12:1 in an English Bible corresponds to 12:2 in the Hebrew Bible and to 11:2 in the Septuagint." Ref-0838, pp. 78-79. See Appendix D: Differences in Versification between English Versions and the Septuagint in Ref-0838, pp. 329-331.

seventy - sevens - destruction of Jerusalem : Dan. 9:24-27 ☪ "This tendency in Jewish circles to see the seventy weeks fulfilled in Jerusalem's destruction in A.D. 70 is even more strongly affirmed in the Jewish chronological work, Seder Olam Rabbah, which, according to tradition, was composed about A.D. 160 (though it may have been supplemented and edited at a later period). This work provides a chronological record that extends from Adam to the Bar Kokhba revolt of A.D. 132-135. The significance of Seder Olam Rabbah is that the chronology espoused therein became commonly accepted in subsequent Jewish writings, including the Talmud and the consensus of Jewish rabbinical scholars (e.g., Rashi, A.D. 1040-1105). Seder Olam Rabbah says that the seventy weeks were seventy years of exile in Babylon followed by another 420 years until the destruction of the second temple in A.D. 70. The latter figure of 420 is achieved by assigning 34 years for the domination of the Persians, 180 years to the Greeks, 103 years for the Maccabees, and 103 years for the Herods. The problem of course, is that these figures are simply unacceptable to modern historians, especially the significantly low figure of 34 years for the Persians." J. Shakespeare - KJV honored? : Ps. 46 ☪ + "Part of this beauty, at least in the Psalms, may well be traced to England's most famous poet and dramatist. Though not one of the translators, William Shakespeare was called in as a consultant on the poetry of the Psalms. In appreciation of his contribution, the translators decided to honor the poet in a unique yet cryptic way. If you turn to Psalm 46 in the King James and New King James Versions, then count down forty-six words, you will meet the word "shake." Count up forty-six from the end and you will meet the word "spear." Also, in February of 1611 when the King James Version was first published, Shakespeare (1564-1616) was forty-six years old. (He would turn forty-seven in April of that year.) The four forty-sixes are simply too many to be coincidental, so the story must be true." Ref-0684, p. 23.

After ‘upwards of an hour’s toilsome walking . . . over steep hills . . . [and] . . . heavy marshes,’ Darby arrived at a peasant’s cottage and found the young lad with his mother, lying on a bed of straw ‘in a state of extreme suffering and exhaustion.’ The boy stared at Darby ‘like a frightened animal.’ Darby was immediately ‘struck with dismay and almost despair,’ not knowing how to reach this lost soul who was close to death, illiterate, and ‘altogether ignorant of the way of salvation.’ Darby records how he ‘raised up’ his heart in prayer, asking the Lord to direct him ‘in this most difficult and trying position’ and to open to him ‘by His Spirit of wisdom a way to set forth the glad tidings of salvation so as to be understood by this poor benighted wanderer.’ As Darby enquired about his condition, the boy told him how he had fallen ill after searching the mountains in inclement weather for one of his father’s sheep, the boy, whose lungs had been pierced by ‘the cold mountain blast,’ lifted it on his shoulders and carried it home, much to the delight of the father. As the boy declared, ‘I did my best to save the sheep.’ The Lord had provided ‘this happy opening’ for Darby, who proceeded to use the story to tell him the parable of the lost sheep (Luke 15:1-7). ‘The Lord mercifully opened not only his understanding, but his heart also, to receive the things spoken. He himself was the lost sheep, Jesus Christ the Good Shepherd, who was sent by the Father to seek for him. . . . My poor sick lad seemed to drink it all in. He received it all; he understood it all. I never saw a clearer proof of the power of the divine Spirit to apply the word of God. . . . Nowhere in Scripture nor in extrabiblical Jewish literature is it stated that the divine presence filled the Second

Temple as it did the Tabernacle (Exodus 40:34-35) and the First Temple (1 Kings 8:10-11; 2 Chronicles 5:13-14; 7:13). There is an intentional parallel between the departure of the Shekinah from the first temple to the Mt. of Olives in Ezekiel’s day leading to the destruction of the temple by Babylon (Eze. 10:18; 11:22-23) and Jesus’ departure from the second temple to the Mt. of Olives (Mtt. 23:38; 24:1-3) leading to its destruction by Rome. It was from this mountain also that He, who was not only the symbol, but the living personal revelation of the glory of Jehovah, finally took his departure from the land, after He had been rejected by the nation. He led His handful of disciples out as far as Bethany (on the Mount of Olives), and He lifted up His hands and blessed them. ‘And it came to pass while He blessed them, He was parted from them, and carried up to heaven’ [Luke 24:50-51]; since then a still darker era in the long Ichabod period of Israel’s history commenced. . . . And what is this but a prophecy in symbolic language of the same event which the heavenly messengers announced to the men of Galilee [Acts 1:9-11]. We love to think that this same mountain on which He once shed tears of sorrow over Jerusalem, the slope of which witnessed His agony and bloody sweat, shall be the first also to witness His manifestation in glory; and that His blessed feet, which in the days of His flesh walked wearily over this mountain on the way to Bethany shall, ‘in that day,’ be planted here in triumph and majesty.” Ref-0206, p. 496. Whenever the invisible God becomes visible, and whenever the omnipresence of God is localized, this is the Shechinah Glory. The usual title found in Scriptures for the Shechinah Glory is the glory of Jehovah, or the glory of the Lord. The Hebrew form is Kvod Adonai, which means "the glory of Jehovah" and describes what the Shechinah Glory is. The Greek title, Doxa Kurion, is translated as "the glory of the Lord." Doxa means "brightness," "brilliance," or "splendor," and it depicts how the Shechinah Glory appears. Other titles give it the sense of "dwelling," which portrays what the Shechinah Glory does. The Hebrew word Shechinah, from the root shachan, means "to dwell." The Greek word skeinei, which is similar in sound as the Hebrew Shechinah (Greek has no "sh" sound), means "to tabernacle." . . . "Σκηνη was the word used by the translators of the Septuagint for the Hebrew מִשְׁכָּן, "tabernacle" (Ex. 25:9). During Israel's pilgrimage from Egypt to Canaan the tabernacle was the place of worship for the people. The tabernacle or tent in the wilderness was the "tent of Jehovah," Himself a pilgrim among His pilgrim people. In sound and meaning σκηνοῶ recalls the Hebrew verb שָׁכַן meaning "to dwell," which is sometimes used of God's dwelling with Israel (Ex. 25:8; 29:46). In postbiblical Hebrew the Jews used the term שְׁכִינָה ("Shekinah," literally, "presence") of the bright cloud of the presence of God that settled on the tabernacle. Shiloh : Gen. 49:10; Eze. 21:26-27 ☪ "to he whose it is" or "to he who it belongs" or "he whose right it is" or "to whom kingship belongs" (Midrash Rabbah 98) "Shiloh is a word meaning "which belongs to him" or "to whom it belongs." This view is sustained by accepting the variant reading šēlōh (i.e., šlh) instead of šīlōh (i.e., šylh). According to this view, šēlōh is a word formed from še, an archaic relative pronoun like the more common ʾašer. [This view] has intertextual support from Ezek 21:27 [Hb. 21:32]. Barnes states that "perhaps the oldest extant reference to the . . . [šīlōh] passage is the parallel phraseology to be found in the book of Ezekiel. The passage in Ezekiel substantiates two ideas: First, it affirms the rendering of šīlōh as "to whom it belongs." Second, it confirms that Gen 49:10 is a messianic prophecy." Ref-1272, p. 49. "There is an intertextual allusion to Gen 49:10 in Ezek 21:27 [32], which describes one who would defeat Israel's enemies and bring blessing to his people. However, since the last kings of Judah were evil and not qualified to fulfill this promise, the nation would have to wait for another one who had the right. Thus, von Rad writes, "Even the grievous harm done to the royal office by those who had last worn the crown did not vitiate the prophet's hope that Jaweh would redeem the promise attached to the throne of David, 'until he comes whose right it is'" (Ezek 21:32). . . . The intertextual reference to Gen 49:10 demonstrates that šiloh does indeed mean "which belongs to him." Ref-1272, p. 53.

One hundred and twenty-six men from Tyre who were shipwrights or mariners . . . were granted rations of 1/2 sila of (sesame) oil, that is the same as given to three mariners from Ashkelon and the royal princes from Judah held in Babylon. This may show that, though not personally named, they were engaged in directing the construction of a fleet of ships to counter Necho II's Red Sea navy. These vessels, according to Herodotus, were to be floated down the R. Euphrates to a new port Nebuchadrezzar established at Teredon. In a similar manner Sennacherib had built ships in Nineveh which, when manned by men from Tyre, Sidon and Cyprus, were dragged overland from the R. Tigris to R. Euphrates at Opis and then floated down to the Persian Gulf. Egyptians given rations while on watch silent - women in church : 1Cor. 14:34; 1Ti. 2:11-12 ☪ "The females in the congregation should receive instruction from the male leadership with quietness and full submission. They should not attempt to turn the tables by clamoring for the office of congregational teacher or by grasping for authority over men. Rather they should, literally, 'be in quietness.' The word, hesychia, translated 'quietness' in 1Ti. 2:11 and 'silent' in verse 12, does not mean complete silence or no talking. It is clearly used elsewhere (Acts 22:2; 2Th. 3:12) to mean 'settled down, undisturbed, not unruly.' A different word (sigao) means 'to be silent, to say nothing' (cf. Luke 18:39; 1Cor. 14:34)." Ref-0038, p. 735. "That. . . a connection existed between the women who are asked to be silent and the disorderly expression of tongues and prophetic speech receives support from two sets of parallel phrases in these texts. In addressing those speaking without the benefit of interpretation, Paul says, 'The speaker should keep quiet in the church' (1Cor. 14:28). Then in 1 Corinthians 14:34, he uses the same words: 'the women should keep quiet in the churches.' The NIV variation in translation does not reflect the fact that the Greek verb (sigaw) is the same in both. Second, in addressing the issues of disorderly prophetic speaking (1Cor. 14:29-32), Paul again urges silence on some so that others can speak. The NIV's 'the first speaker should stop' (1Cor. 14:30) again does not reflect the fact that the verb sigaw (?remain silent') is also used here. But more important, in calling on the prophets in the congregation to recognize that they are mutually accountable to one another, Paul says, 'The spirits of the prophets are subject to the control of prophets' (1Cor. 14:32). The Greek word rendered 'subject of the control of' is hypotassw. That is the same word Paul uses in 1 Corinthians 14:34, where he follows the admonition to silence (according to the NIV) with the words '[they] must be in submission.' . . . These parallelisms in the imperatives to 'keep quiet' and 'to be in submission' strongly suggest that the problem of disorderly participation in prophetic proclamation and tongues was particularly prominent among women believers in Corinth, and that it is with respect to this context that Paul's admonitions must be understood." Ref-0120, pp. 615-616. ". . . the demand for silence on the part of women does not bring on irreconcilable conflict with 1 Corinthians 11:2-16, where under certain conditions women are permitted to pray and prophesy, because the silence of 1Cor. 14:33b-36 is limited by context: women are to keep silent in connection with the evaluation of prophecies, to which the context refers, for otherwise they would be assuming a role of doctrinal authority in the congregation (contra 1 Ti. 2:11-15)." Ref-0698, pp. 40-41. "Paul's use of the word hēsychia indicates a quietness of temperament rather than absolute silence. Had Paul wanted to communicate absolute silence he would have used the different word siagō." Andy Woods, Ref-1217, p. 53.

Justin and Irenaeus (a close contemporary of Justin's and fellow apologist) both record that Simon began one of the very first quasi-Christian cults. According to Irenaeus, the magician borrowed biblical imagery and biblical terminology and adapted them to various myths that he invented about himself -- including the blasphemous claim that Simon himself was the true God incarnate. Thus the law is the 'strength of sin,' which forces the evil from within to without (1Cor. 15:56); and sin itself is as the fire in iron glowing but not yet red-hot, which at first burns quietly without being noticed, but if splashed with water hisses and rebels." Now it is the peculiar ministry of the Spirit to testify to the Son and thus bring sinners into the only place where sin can be forgiven. . . . It follows therefore that sinful resistance to the Holy Spirit, in the exercise of this peculiar ministry, must logically belong to a category of sin which is unpardonable. . . . a hardened resistance to the witness of the Spirit will keep the sinner outside of Christ forever." six day war - events leading to : ☪ + "In May-June 1967 our family was in Egypt and saw firsthand that the entire Arab world was preparing to annihilate Israel. From Israel's very inception the Arabs had sworn to exterminate her. On May 15, 1948, the Arab League declared, 'The Arabs intend to conduct a war of extermination and momentous massacre which will be spoken of like the Mongolian massacres and the Crusades.' (That determination is even stronger today.) To Egypt's National Assembly March 26, 1964, Nasser denounced 'the very existence of Israel.' On March 8, 1965, he boasted, 'We shall enter [Palestine] with its soil saturated in blood.' Shortly thereafter he declared, 'We aim at . . . the eradication of Israel.' On May 16, 1967, Nasser ordered UN peace-keeping forces to leave the Sinai. By May 18, Egyptian troops were massed in the Sinai on Israel's border and Syrian troops had done the same on the Golan. The 'Voice of the Arabs' broadcast boasted that 'The sole method we shall apply against Israel is total war, which will result in the extermination of Zionist existence.' On May 20, the Syrian Defense Minister declared, 'Our forces are now entirely ready. . . . to explode the Zionist presence in the Arab homeland. . . . to enter into a battle of annihilation.' On May 22, Egypt closed the Straits of Tiran to all Israeli shipping. It was an act of war. On May 27, Nasser threatened, 'Our basic objective will be the destruction of Israel. . . . We will not accept any coexistence with Israel. . . .' On May 30, he announced, 'The armies of Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Lebanon are poised on the borders of Israel. . . . while standing behind us are the armies of Iraq, Algeria, Kuwait, Sudan and the whole Arab nation. . . .' Iraq's president thundered, 'This is our opportunity to wipe out the ignominy which has been with us since 1948. Our goal is clear-to wipe Israel off the map.' In fact, no Arab map then or now shows Israel's existence. About 250,000 troops and more than 2,000 tanks and 700 aircraft were poised around Israel for the imminent battle. [Mitchell G. skepticism : Pr. 18:13; Pr. 18:17 ☪ "I once listened to a conversation which illustrates my thought. It was between two young men returning after the close of a summer's vacation to the college at which both were students. The principal talker was, as I discovered in the course of the afternoon, an only son. On his upper lip was the first dark shadow of a coming mustache. He possessed that peculiar wisdom which belongs in this world to only the college sophomore. He was expressing to his companion his views on the Bible and religion, said he knew too much to believe in either; admitted that his mother believed in both and read her Bible every day; said that that might do for women and children, but not for any intelligent man in the light of present scientific knowledge. You would have thought that Darwin and Huxley and Lord Kelvin had studied at his feet and that he was the Gamaliel of the present day. It is impossible to reproduce in language the self-sufficient sneering tone in which he spoke of the Bible, classing it with nursery rhymes, the story of Jack and the Beanstalk and the like, and the complacent pity with which he referred to those who were foolish enough to regard it as a sacred book. It is to be hoped that the budding sophomore lived long enough to learn that no gentleman speaks sneeringly of that which has been the life-long faith and comfort of his mother." Song of Solomon - Isaiah hints at? : Sos. 1:1; Isa. 5:1 ⚠ + Look for similar phrases in Song of Solomon as are used in this passage in Isaiah.

Song of Solomon - meaning : Sos. 1:1 ⚠ "... Roland Murphy has concluded that "the eventual canonization of the work ... can best be explained if the poetry originated as religious rather than secular literature." Therefore, James Hamilton has recently averred that "the Song of Songs is in the canon because it was written from a messianic perspective in order to nourish a messianic hope." Is it possible that this love song was written with the authorial intent to advance and explain the messianic hope?" Ref-1272, p. 79.

Song of Solomon - name of God : Sos. 8:6 ⚠ "... although no name or term for God appears in an English translation of the Song of Solomon except in the New American Standard Bible, the Hebrew name of God, Yah, occurs at the end of Sos. 8:6. No other recent major translation of the Old Testament into English follows the lead of the NASB translators." Ref-0075, p. 260.

sons - of God in OT : Gen. 6:2; Gen. 6:4; Gen. 6:9; Deu. 32:8 (cf. LXX, Qumran); Job 1:6; Job 2:1; Job 38:7; Ps. 89:6 ☩ "A fragment from [Dea Sea Scroll] Cave IV containing Deuteronomy 32:8 reads, 'according to the number of the sons of God,' which is translated 'angels of God' by the LXX, as in Genesis 6:4 (margin); Job 1:6; 2:1; and 38:7. The Masoretic Text reads, 'according to the number of the children of Israel.'" Ref-0075, p. 367.

sons - of God intermarry : Gen. 6:2; Gen. 6:9; 1Pe. 3:20; 2Pe. 2:4; Jude 1:6 ☩ "ben elohiyim," "divine beings" (Tanakh), "angels of God" (Josephus), "sons of God" (Septuagint), "The term 'sons of God' is a general term which means 'to be brought into existence by God's creative act.'" "This explanation [angels, not godly Sethites] is upheld by the majority, e.g. Philo, Josephus, most of the Rabbis, the Septuagint, Kurtz, Delitzsch, Gunkel, Konig, Pember. On the other side Augustine, Calvin, J. P. Lange apply the passage to the comingling of Sethites and Cainites." Ref-0197, p.69. "The words "in like manner," are associated grammatically, not with the words "Sodom" and "Gomorrah" and "the cities," which are in the nominative case, but with the two verbal forms, the participles "giving themselves over to fornication" and "going after strange flesh." A word in the accusative case in Greek is not associated grammatically with the word in the nominative case, but the verb. . . . Now to what do the words "in like manner," refer? The text, punctuated as we have just indicated, would refer the words to the angels of verse 6. That is, Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them, in like manner to the angels, committed fornication. And that is correct. But the Greek text gives us further help. The demonstrative pronoun τούτοις appears immediately after the words "in like manner." . . . That is, those cities gave themselves over to fornication in like manner to these, namely, the angels. Thus we have a clear statement in the Greek text that angels committed fornication and went after strange flesh. One such statement in the Word of God is enough to establish the fact. . . . One will have to accept the fact of the angels committing fornication, repugnant and unexplainable as it is, or reject the verbal inspiration of the New Testament and the rules of Greek syntax." Ref-0946, pp. 32-35.

sopherim - meaning : ☩ + "With respect to the Sopherim, the passing of time seems to have brought about a subtle change in their text critical role. Instead of being active participants in the process of deciding between variant readings, there are hints that they eventually assumed a more passive role as keepers of the text. Such a change is suggested by the oft-quoted statement from TB Kiddushin 30a that the Sopherim were so called because they counted the number of letters in the biblical text (the word Sopherim comes from the verb sap_ar, one of its meanings being "count"). This counting of letters and concern for tradition is precisely the development that flowered later in the work of the Masoretes." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 p. 4:805. "The term "sopherim" ("those who count"), which had been the title of the scribes, came to be applied to those who wrote the consonantal text. Those who provided the vowel points and accents were called "nakdanim" ("pointers"). Those who provided the masora were called the masoretes. . . . Modern scholars often refer to all three functions under the general title "masorete."" Ref-0841, p. 9.

"You may not be able to answer ultimate questions of free will, but take what God shows you and leave the rest to Him. God has the answer, 'Secret things belong unto the Lord our God' (Deu. 29:29). Habakkuk says 'the just shall live by faith' and faith sometimes means our being content not to know. The desire to know may be sheer intellectual pride. There are antinomies in the Christian faith so that the Christian must say two things at the same time--God is sovereign, man is responsible. Above all we must remember that we are standing on Holy ground. Let us be little children and humble before Him (Mtt. 11:25)." Martyn Lloyd-Jones, Ref-0935, p. 241.

Second, this practice has served to reverse the instruction given in the Bible, for every believer to evangelize, to take their witness out into the world and proclaim it. Instead, many Christians believe their duty is to bring unsaved people to their churches, where can be heard the gospel presented by their pastors. In other words, the Augustinian concept of the City of God was based on an either/or, that is, an inferior/superior eschatological regard for earth and heaven rather than the Hebrew both/and eschatological hope concerning earth and heaven, materiality and spirituality. Herein lies a fundamental point of difference that I regard to be at the heart of much amillennial allegiance to anti-Semitic eschatology, often quite unconsciously.” Ref-1263, pp. 211-212

These record that about 800,000 prisoners were executed (for either political or criminal offences) under Stalin, while about 1.7 million died in the Gulag (penal labour camps) and some 389,000 perished during 'ethnic cleansing' of various groups to 'internal exile' in central Asia and Siberia before, during and after World War II. Most history researchers regard these figures as far too low. Montefiore says, 'Perhaps 20 million had been killed; 28 million deported, of whom 18 million had slaved in the Gulags.'" starlight - distant : Gen. 1:14-19 ☺ + "We live in a universe that is truly enormous in size. So large that distances are commonly measured in light-years. One light-year is the distance light travels in one year. Light travels very fast indeed; so fast, in fact, that we don't normally perceive it in our daily experience. Yet it has been measured at about 300,000 kilometres (about 186,000 miles) per second. This means that a light-year represents a distance of about ten trillion kilometres (six trillion miles). . . . Even the nearest star (other than our sun) is 4.3 light-years away, and most of the rest of the stars in our galaxy are hundreds to thousands, even tens of thousands, of light-years away." Ref-0813, pp. 10-11. "I don't dispute the commonly held view that the visible universe is about twenty-eight billion light-years across (i.e., its diameter). At first glance, that would mean it should take a beam of light about fourteen billion years to travel to us from the outer limits of the universe (i.e. along its radius)." Ref-0813, p. 10. "In such a 'time dilation' model, the key is that the universe is only thousands of years old -- but relativity leads us to ask, 'By which clocks?' The answer is clear, namely that the focus of Genesis history is on earth clocks. From the perspective of an observer on the earth, therefore, it is possible that the entire universe can be only six thousand years old, while there is 'plenty of time' for light, travelling at today's constant speed in local frames of reference, to cover a distance of billions of light-years. It is only necessary to show how such time-dilation would have occurred, i.e. what the mechanism was that would have made earth clocks run at such different speeds to cosmic clocks." Ref-0813, pp. 19-20. "The expansion of space caused an enormous time-dilation event on the earth, meaning that Earth clocks slowed by a trillion times compared to cosmic clocks. Time flowed in the cosmos at the same rate it does on Earth now, but during the time-dilation period, Earth's clocks ran slow. The actual factor can be estimated from the ratio of the Hubble-Carmeli time constant . . . to the length of time that time-dilation continued, as determined by Earth clocks. If the latter was over Day 4 only, then the time-dilation factor is at least a few trillion or more. During Creation Day 4 God created the heavenly bodies (stars and galaxies), and if Earth clocks ran slower by at least [a] few trillion times (an outcome that 'falls out' of the new physics, as will be seen), then there would have been sufficient time (in a universe created some six thousand years ago by Earth clocks) for light to travel the vast distances of the universe. . . . It logically follows that this means the universe is very young as measured by Earth clocks. It only has the appearance of great age because we are biased by the vast size of the universe." Ref-0813, pp. 108-109,111 ". . . all matter created this way was created during Day 4 by the Creator. This was part of the creation of the heavenly bodies, a process which we are still able to see from Earth with space-based and giant Earth-based telescopes, which reveal His Glory for all to see. Since, when we look out into the cosmos we are looking back in time, due to the finite speed of light, we are then looking at the events of Day 4 creation as they are actually happening." Ref-0813, pp. 113,115. Something to consider in the absence of time dilation: "If no light beams were part of the original creation, then Adam and Eve would have had to wait for the light to travel to them from the heavenly bodies. So, on the night of day 6 there would have been no stars in the sky at all. Perhaps some of the planets might have been visible, depending on their locations within their orbits. The planets visible with the naked eye (Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn) all lie within about 80 light minutes from earth so their light would have arrived on day 4. The nearest star is the Alpha Centauri triplet and it is more than 4 light-years away. So the multitude of stars would not have become visible for many years after the creation, and the full glory of the Milky Way would not have become visible for more than about 30,000 years (i.e., we would still not be able to see it). . . . A further illustration of the problem occurred in 1987 when astronomers had the rare good fortune of catching a supernova on camera. This one, called "SN1987a" (because it was the first one recorded for 1987) occurred in the nearby galaxy called the Large Magellanic Cloud (LMC). The two Magellanic Cloud galaxies (called Large and Small) are visible at night near the south celestial pole. The LMC is about 12 times and the SMC is about 5 times the apparent diameter of the moon. The LMC is about 170,000 light-years away. According to the "created light beam" scenario, we should not be able to see SN1987a for another 164,000 years!" Ref-0814, pp. 169-170. "Yet, since the creation of modern telescopes, it appears that the universe does have a "billions of years" time scale -- it is out there, implied by the vastness of space and the constancy of the speed of light. Relativistic time dilation can reconcile the billions of years of cosmic history with the thousands of years of earth history, but we should be careful not to lose the biblical perspective. God's time for us is earth time, and within that time frame there are no billions of years, either past or future." Ref-0814, p. 253. "The question might be asked, 'Shouldn't we then see massive blueshifts because of the existence of the large time dilation between sources at the edge of the universe and the observer?' No, the time dilation . . . only occurred on Earth during the period of rapid expansion. Once the expansion was switched off there would be no difference in clock rates. And the expansion was switched off six thousand years ago. The Creator, who is omnipresent, switched off the acceleration when he stopped stretching out the fabric of space at that time. If we see on Earth to observe the cosmos during the period when the acceleration stopped we may have seen blueshifted starlight change colour as earth clocks began to tick at approximately the same rate as cosmic clocks. What we now observe in the universe is the redshifted light from the galaxies that has resulted from the expansion, not from this time dilation mechanism." John Hartnett, "A 5D spherically symmetric expanding universe is young", Ref-0784, Volume 21 Number 1, 2007, 69:74, p. 71. "This then leads to the conclusion that at the Creation massive time dilation occurred with respect to the observer at the centre of a spherically symmetric, expanding universe. . . . The time dilation effect occurred on Earth during the Creation Week and was switched off simultaneously with the cessation of the acceleration of the expansion. This means the universe may no longer be expanding; we only see residual effects because of the finite travel time of light. . . . the validity of the new theory applying to both the current and past epochs leads to the inescapable conclusion that the time it has taken light to travel from the most distant sources to Earth is billions of years of cosmic time, yet a matter of only days or years in local atomic time units." John Hartnett, "A 5D spherically symmetric expanding universe is young", Ref-0784, Volume 21 Number 1, 2007, 69:74, pp. 73-74. "There are several creationist models that attempt to explain seeing distant starlight in a young universe. They include exponentially-decaying light speed, curved space, and large-scale relativistic time-dilation. Each of these models remains unproven and tentative. For example, the just-mentioned ideas do not explain the nature of sunshine as we understand it today. In current solar models, 10,000-170,000 years are required for solar radiation to reach the sun's surface from the core due to absorption and reemission. Do the solar photons we detect today come from the sun's core, or where they directly created midway from the solar core on their outward journey?" Ref-0784, Don B. Rolleston cited "proof texts" without context but in so doing made an argument that became popular. Rolleston's assertion was that "the signs [in the zodiac] were intended to symbolize prophecy, as recorded in the Holy Scriptures" (first part, 7). Subsequent books teaching a Gospel in the stars can be traced to Rolleston's Mazzaroth. For example, Joseph R. Seiss in The gospel in the Stars acknowledged: "[F]rom [Rolleston's] tables and references the writer of these Lectures was helped to some of his best information." E. W. Bullinger, in The Witness of the Stars, likewise described his debt to Rolleston: "Some years ago it was my privilege to enjoy the acquaintance of Miss Frances Rolleston, of Keswick, and to carry on a correspondence with here with respect to her work, Mazzaroth: or, the Constellations. She was the first to create an interest in this important subject." Kenneth C. Crucifixion was thus a reminder of the absence of Jewish autonomy in Palestine. This helps explain the Jewish statement to Pilate, "We are not permitted to put anyone to death" as they sought the crucifixion of Christ (John 18:31)." Donald E. Green, "The Folly of the Cross," Ref-0164, 15/1 (Spring 2004) 59-69, p. 65. "As a law-enforcement body [the Sanhedrin] had its own police force and served as a court of law. There is continuing debate as to its authority to carry out capital punishment. John 18:31 is the lone ancient source to indicate clearly that it did not have such authority. Other evidence indicates that the Sanhedrin was not completely limited in capital cases.³⁵ [35] Schurer, History, 2:221-22, notes the Sanhedrin seems to have been competent to try and execute various capital cases: (1) the entry of anyone into the Holy of Holies, even the high priest on any occasion other than the Day of Atonement; (2) the entry of a Gentile, even a Roman citizen, into the inner court of the temple; (3) Stephen; (4) Paul; (5) James the brother of Jesus; and (6) a priest's daughter convicted of adultery." stoning - Stephen martyred : Acts 7:58 ☩ Capital punishment was prohibited when the Jewish leaders stoned Stephen. The stoning of Stephen took place at an "opportune" time when a Roman procurator had passed away, and the new procurator had not yet arrived on the scene. With no procurator to control matters, the Sanhedrin-through a mob scene-were able to carry out Stephen's execution, thought it was quite illegal. This event stands as the official rejection of the testimony of the resurrection of Jesus by the Jewish religious leaders. From this point on, the gospel begins to be taken to the Gentiles. Stephen stands as the transition in emphasis in Acts between Peter (as apostle to the Jews) and Paul (as apostle to the Gentiles) between which the rejection of Stephen's testimony of Jesus stands. Luke introduces Paul (as Saul) in Acts 7:58.

The Jews there were under the necessity of gathering together in small groups, as they were no longer able to attend the Temple. This necessity would be felt by Jews wherever scattered, and so everywhere synagogues were built.” Ref-0117, p. 50. “Another great and far-reaching change of this period [after the Exile] was the introduction of synagogues. To the idea of worshiping elsewhere than in the temple the people had become somewhat accustomed during the exile. And when, after their return, Ezra set the example of a similar service under the very shadow of the temple, it was readily taken up and carried, little by little, into every part of the land. There were, however, other reasons which contributed to this result. The second temple was itself a disappointment. It could never quite take the place, in the affections of the people, of that which had been destroyed. It was destitute of some of its chief attractions. This made it easier to be reconciled to the simple forms of the synagogue, and to grasp, in some measure, the sublime thought, which for its full development, however, required other centuries of bitter experience, that God is a spirit and that they who worship Him should worship Him in spirit and in truth.” Bissell in Lange, J. or rigorous Calvinist persuasion, but theologians from the churches of England and the Palatinate tempered the rigor of its decisions. The French delegates were not permitted by Louis XIII to leave France. The canons of the synod assert: (1) that election is founded on God's purpose 'before the foundation of the world'; (2) that the efficacy of Christ's atonement extends to the elect only; (3) that the Fall has left man in a state of corruption and helplessness; his gleams of natural light are of no value for salvation; (4) that regeneration is an inward renewal of the soul and of the will and is wholly a work of God, 'powerful, delightful, astonishing, mysterious, and ineffable'; (5) that God so preserves the elect, ever renewing their repentance, patience, humility, gratitude, and good works, that, despite their sins, they do not finally fall away from grace. We have here the Five Points of Calvinism -- unconditional election, limited atonement, total depravity, irresistible grace, and the perseverance of the saints." Ref-1096, p. 265. 'Therefore to scotch the rumor, Nero substituted as culprits, and punished with the utmost refinements of cruelty, a class of men, loathed for their vices, whom the crowd styled Christians. Talmud : ☩ "to learn," "to study". Collection of rabbinical laws, law decisions, and comments on the laws of Moses. Man-made additions to the Mosaic Law, product of the Pharisees. Made up of the Mishnah and Gemara. Spans 70 to 100 volumes. "When the Talmud is spoken of without any qualification the reference is to the Babylonian Talmud; the Palestinian Talmud is only about a fourth the volume of the Babylonian, which contains about two million five hundred thousand words." Ref-0006, p. 128. "Between A.D. 100 and 500, the Talmud (instruction, teaching) grew up as a body of Hebrew civil and canonical law based on the Torah. The Talmud basically represents the opinions and decisions of Jewish teachers from about 300 B.C. to A.D. 500, and it consists of two main divisions: the Mishnah and the Gemara." Ref-0075, p. 502. "This completed Mishnah itself became an object of study, and a body of commentary grew up around it in the rabbinical schools of both Palestine and of Babylonia. These commentaries or Gemaras formed a sort of supplement to the Mishnah, and Mishnah and Gemara together are usually known as the Talmud. The 'Jerusalem Talmud', consisting of the Mishnah together with the accumulated Gemara of the Palestinian schools, was completed about A.D. 300; the much larger Babylonian Talmud continued to grow for two centuries more, before it was reduced to writing about the year 500." Ref-0239, p. 103.

Talmud - Jesus - evidence : ☪ "As the Mishnah is a law-code, and the Talmuds commentaries on this code, there is little occasion in these writings for references to Christianity, and what references there are are hostile. But, such as they are, these references to at least show that there was not the slightest doubt of the historical character of Jesus. According to the earlier Rabbis whose opinions are recorded in these writings, Jesus of Nazareth was a transgressor in Israel, who practised magic, scorned the words of the wise, led the people astray, and said he had not come to destroy the law but to add to it. He was hanged on Passover Eve for heresy and misleading the people. His disciples of whom five are named, healed the sick in his name." Ref-0239, p. 103.

Talmud - Zec. 12:10 : Zec. 12:10 ☪ Some rabbis took this passage as messianic, Talmud in Succah 52a: "One opinion is that they mourn for Messiah Ben Joseph who is killed, and another explanation is that they mourn for the slaying of the evil inclination. It is well according to him who explains that the cause is the slaying of the Messiah since that well agrees with this verse. If it refers to the slaying of the evil inclination, it must be asked, is this an occasion for mourning? Is it not rather an occasion for rejoicing? Why then should they weep?" Ref-0011, p. 72.

Targum - Jerusalem : ☪ "The Jerusalem Targum also appeared at about 700, but has survived in fragments only. None of these Targums is important to the textual critic, but they are all rather significant to the study of hermeneutics [interpretation], as they indicate the manner in which Scripture was interpreted by rabbinical scholars." Ref-0075, p. 502.

Targum - meaning : Ne. 8:7 ☪ "the Aramaic word for 'translation'" Ref-0152, p. 34. "The word that refers to a translation is targum. In the synagogues the Targums were always oral, while the honored Hebrew text was always read from a scroll. This was a strict rule, lest the paraphrase be confused with the authoritative text. Accordingly, over the centuries a number of Targums arose, and later they were committed to writing, at least by the beginning of the Christian era. By the fifth century two official Targums had emerged, Targum Onkelos of the Pentateuch and Targum Jonathan of the Prophets. Of the two, Targum Onkelos is considered the greater authority." "Probably the oldest interpretive form is the targum (translation, interpretation), which addressed both the linguistic and the interpretive problems at the same time. Written in Aramaic, a targum is a running paraphrase-commentary on the Hebrew text. Nehemiah 8 gives an example of the situations in which targums arose and of their use." Ref-1200, p. 128.

Targum - quoted in NT : Deu. 32:35; Rom. 12:19; Heb. 10:30 ☪ "... both Paul and the writer to the Hebrews quote Deuteronomy 32:35 in the form 'Vengeance is mine, I will repay'... This follows neither the familiar Hebrew wording (?Vengeance is mine, and recompense) nor the Septuagint (?In the day of vengeance I will repay)', but it agrees exactly with the targumic version." Ref-0073, p. 285.

Targums - Aramaic quoted : Deu. 32:35; Ps. 68:18; Isa. 6:10; Mark 4:12; Rom. 12:19; Eph. 4:8; Heb. 10:30 ☪ "The statement 'Vengeance is mine, I will repay' (from Deu. 32:35), is quoted in Romans 12:19 and Hebrews 10:30 in a form corresponding neither to the Hebrew text nor to the Septuagint, but to the Aramaic Targums on the Pentateuch. That renderings or paraphrases known to us only from the Targums were found also in Greek versions of the Old Testament in the first century A.D. is suggested also by such expressions as 'lest they should... be forgiven' (Mark 4:12) in a quotation from Isaiah 6:10 where the Hebrew and Septuagint read 'lest they... be healed'; and 'he gave gifts to men' (Eph. 4:8) in a quotation from Psalm 68:18 (LXX 67:19) where the Hebrew and Septuagint read '?... received gifts among men'. (In Deu. 32:35; Isa. 6:10 and Ps. 68:18 the Peshitta (the Syriac version of the Old Testament) agrees with the targumic construction.)" Ref-0073, pp. 53-54

temple - built in 46 years : John 2:20 ①
 “Several grammars list this [οικοδομηθη] as a constative aorist, to the effect that it should be translated, ‘this temple was built in forty-six years.’ The usual assumption is that ναος refers to the temple precincts. Josephus indicates that the temple precincts were not completed until Albinus’ procuratorship (c. 62-64 CE), in which case the precincts were still in the process of being built when the statement in John 2:20 was made. The idea would then be, ‘This temple has been in the process of being built for the last forty-six years.’ There are several problems with this, however, including the meaning of ναος in John, the use of the dative’s temporal referent, and the use of the aorist. The force of the aorist may have some impact on the date of the crucifixion. First, the NT normally makes a distinction between ἱερον and the ναος: The ἱερον refers to the temple precincts (including the courts) while the ναος refers to the holy place or sanctuary proper. If that distinction obtains in John 2:20, then the aorist verb οἰκοδομηθη would refer only to the sanctuary. Notably, the sanctuary was completed in c. 18-17 BCE. Forty-six years later would be 29-30 CE. Second, the dative (τεσσαρακοντα και εξ ετεσιν most naturally refers to a point in time, rather than an extent of time. This would fit with a completion date of the sanctuary (?was built [at a point in time] forty-six years ago’). Third, there is some difficulty with taking the aorist to speak of an action that was still in process (?this temple has been [in the process of being] built for the past forty-six years’). The imperfect would be more natural, but not at all required. These strands of evidence suggest that the aorist is more naturally taken as consummative. If so, and if this periscope occurred in the first year of Jesus’ ministry (as its location in John 2 suggests), then Jesus was probably crucified three years later, in 33 CE.” Ref-0129, pp. 560-561. “Herod began rebuilding the Temple in 19 B.C., and the work was dedicated ten years later, although detail work continued on it for the next 75 years.” Ref-0144, p. 65. “Herod’s work on the temple in Jerusalem deserves special note. The structure erected by Zerubbabel was old, had been damaged in wars, and was too small for the crowds that flocked to the city during pilgrimage feasts. It was not in keeping with the new character Herod envisioned for the city. A thousand Levites were trained and dedicated to the task of rebuilding, which was begun about 20 or 19 B.C. The platform on the temple mount was expanded. The major structure was completed in about a year and a half; additional work continued until almost A.D. 70, when it was destroyed by the Romans. Its size and magnificence were renowned throughout the ancient world.” Ref-1200, p. 96.

Since this did not occur, the critics insist that this incident must be a later redactional insertion. However, this objection can be put to rest in light of the archaeological evidence. . . under the direction of Benjamin Mazar and Meir Ben-Dov (1968-1977). Their work has confirmed certain details in the Gospel account, such as the presence of large animals in the halls of the money changers (see John 2:14). They also have shown that a smaller Temple market was isolated inside the Royal Stoa (Hebrew, Chanuyot) and did not spread out over into the Court of the Gentiles. . . This event was ultimately interpreted negatively as evidence of divine displeasure. . . This interpretation is also given in a story told in the Babylonian Talmud (Yoma 39b), along with another concerning the Temple service, which reflected the problem of divine favor: *Our Rabbis taught: During the last forty years before the destruction of the Temple the lot 'for the Lord' did not come up in the right hand; nor did the crimson-colored string [suspended in the Temple to show the acceptance of the pascal sacrifice] become white; nor did the western-most light shine; and the doors of the Temple would open by themselves, until R.  “. . . to the objection that a renewal of ‘expiatory’ animal sacrifices is unthinkable and would deny the complete efficacy of our Lord’s atoning death, the reply is very simple: no animal sacrifice in the Bible has ever had an expiatory efficacy [Heb. 10:4]. . . These sacrifices were simply a ‘remembrance’ of the sins committed, and pointed forward to the one sacrifice which would take them away. temple - Samaritan : 2K. 17:24-30; Ne. 13:23-31; John 4:20 ☪ Josephus records the Samaritan temple [on Mt. Gerizim] was destroyed by John Hyrcanus in 113 BC. Ruins are located beneath floor of 5th century Byzantine church of Mary Theotokos, which have been uncovered in excavations in 1920s. Menachem, a priest in the Jerusalem Temple, fell in love with Nikaso, the daughter of a Samaritan leader Sanballat. Menachem was told to choose between Nikaso and his priesthood. He chose Nikaso and Sanballat built his new son-in-law a rival temple on Mount Gerizim and made him high priest. Ref-0025, p. 188. “. . . in about 432 B.C. the daughter of Sanballat was married to the grandson of the high priest Eliashib. This resulted in the expulsion of the couple, and provided the historical incident for the break between the Jews and the Samaritans (cf. Ne. 13:23-31). During the conflict the Jews overstressed the foreign element in the ancestry of the Samaritans, and called them Cutheans after the name of the Middle-Babylonia city, Cuthah, from whence the Assyrians imported the foreign element into Samaria (cf. 2 Kings 17:24, 30). . . . At that time a copy of the Torah may have been taken to Samaria and placed in the temple build on Mount Gerizim at Shechem (Nablus), where the rival worship and priesthood were established. . . . the Samaritan Pentateuch has illustrated the Jewish-Samaritan hostility quite effectively, as it emphasizes the importance of Mount Gerizim instead of Jerusalem, and inserts additional material into the text, for example after Exodus 20:2-17 and Deuteronomy 5:6-21.” Ref-0075, pp. 498-500. “It [the Samaritan Pentateuch] also contains biased sectarian insertions, designed to show that Jehovah chose Mt. Gerizim rather than Zion, and Shechem rather than Jerusalem as His holy city.” Ref-0001, p. 48. “A remnant of the ancient Samaritans still lives on Mt. Gerizim and they practice sacrifices there just as they did 2,700 years ago. . . . As fighting between the Ptolemies and Seleucids swirled around the country in the intertestamental period, physical decline again took place at Shechem. This decline culminated when the Jewish leader, John Hyrcanus, took advantage of the temporary absence of outside armies and destroyed the Samaritan temple on Mt. Gerizim (ca. 126 BC). He leveled the city in 107 BC. Shechem never recovered from this destruction and lay in ruins until identified by Tiersch in 1901. . . . [Photo of] Mt. Gerizim (left peak) as seen from Jacob’s well. When the Samaritan woman said to Jesus, “Our fathers worshipped on this mountain,” she was no doubt referring to the ruins of the Samaritan temple on top of Mt. Gerizim. The small structure on the peak marks the location of the ruins of the Samaritan temple that easily could have been seen from Jacob’s well in Jesus’ day.” David G. Ref-0031, p. 113. Regarding Preterist assertion that this is Herod’s temple, to be destroyed in 70 A.D., there are at least two problems with this view. Firstly, most scholars date the book of Revelation after that destruction and secondly, “It does not matter at all whether the temple is thought to still be standing in Jerusalem at the time that John sees the vision, since that would not necessarily have any bearing upon a vision. John is told by the angel accompanying him during the vision to ‘measure the temple’ (Rev. 11:1). Measure what temple? The temple in the vision. In fact, Ezekiel, during a similar vision of a temple (Eze. 40 - Eze. 48) was told to measure that temple. [Preterists] would agree, that when Ezekiel saw and was told to measure a temple, that there was not one standing in Jerusalem.” Ref-0055, December 2000, p.

Matthew 23:38-39 would seem to imply that the house of the Jewish nation (the temple) is to be 'left desolate' for a period of time which comes to an end when the Jew repent and recognize Jesus as Messiah. "Now I have shown in the third book, that no one is termed God by the apostles when speaking for themselves, except Him who truly is God, the Father of our Lord, by whose directions the temple which is at Jerusalem was constructed for those purposes which I have already mentioned; in which [temple] the enemy shall sit, endeavouring to show himself as Christ, as the Lord also declares: "But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, which has been spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place (let him that readeth understand), then let those who are in Judea flee into the mountains; and he who is upon the house-top, let him not come down to take anything out of his house: for there shall then be great hardship, such as has not been from the beginning of the world until now, nor ever shall be."" textual criticism - abuse : ☪ "Several difficulties unfortunately arise in the use of the traditional canons of textual criticism: 1. Students tend to ignore the likelys and probabyls that pepper any discussion of these canons. One can never forget that such rules are only general principles of scribal proclivities and that therefore they can never be applied automatically. 2. Specific qualifications are necessary. We need to remember that the classic formulations of these canons, especially those by NT text critic Johann J. Griesbach, have been carefully nuanced. . . . At any rate, the fact that the canons of textual criticism are often misused leads some scholars to minimize their importance and even to suggest that they should be jettisoned. This would be a serious mistake. It is true that general probability does not tell us what a particular scribe will do in a particular passage, but that is no reason to neglect relevant data." Ref-0838, p. 128-129.

textual criticism - canonical rules : ☪

"Among the most important of these are to prefer: the shorter reading, the more difficult

reading, the older reading, the reading with the best external MS support, the reading that best explains the rise of other readings, the reading that best suits the style of the author. . . . one can never apply these rules rigidly.

Counteracting the tendency for scribes to add is the equally well-attested phenomenon of haplography or accidental omission. Likewise, a simpler reading in the versions may be preferred over an obviously corrupted reading in the MT. These modifications of the rules are valid for all types of literatures, but perhaps especially for the OT, given its unique transmission history and the care with which the Hebrew Scriptures were copied in comparison with Greco-Roman literature or even the NT." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 pp. 4:805-814, p. 4:812-813. See former text for detailed explanations and examples of the various forms of scribal errors as they apply to the OT.

textual criticism - canonical rules - Matthew Henry : 1Jn. 5:7-8 ☪

"It was far more easy for a transcriber, by turning away his eye, or by the obscurity of a copy, it being obliterated or defaced on the top or bottom of the page, or worn away in such materials as the ancients had to write upon, to lose and omit the page, than for an interpolator to devise and insert it. He must be very bold and impudent who could hope to escape detection and shame; and profane too, who durst venture to make an addition to a supposed sacred book. . . ." G.W. Anderson and D.E. Anderson, Why 1 John 5:7-8 is in The Bible, Ref-0094, p. 2 quoting Matthew Henry, Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Whole Bible, VI.1090-91 "the critics are wedded to the idea that the shorter readings must nearly always be the originals. Having suffered at the hands or finger of various typists, I cannot accept this criterion. They more often omit words and phrases than make additions." Ref-0154, p. 23.

textual criticism - canonical rules - questioned : ☪ +

"The consideration of the matter of style and the tendency of the Alexandrians to exceed the other text-types in Atticising suggests that two "rules" of textual criticism be reconsidered: 1) "prefer the shorter reading," and 2) "prefer the more difficult reading." These two rules are "tailor-made" to favor the more Attistic and less Koine (plain) type of text. In view of the above, it would seem that in many instances reversing the rules would lead more directly to the original text, i.e., "where atticising is suspected, prefer the longer and/or the simpler reading." Ref-0787, pp. 113-114. "Critical editions such as the NA²⁷ and UBS reflect a predominantly Alexandrian textbase, with readings established on a variant-by-variant basis by means of subjectively applied internal criteria coupled with selectively determined external principles (the "reasoned" method of modern eclecticism). This modern eclectic process of subjective textual determination on a per-variant basis results in a textual patchwork that within numerous verses finds no support among any extant document, even over relatively short segments of scripture. This problematic situation does not occur among the manuscript consensus that forms the basis of the Byzantine Textform." Ref-0493, p. iv.

textual criticism - church fathers - caveats :

☉ + "In many ways, the value of these quotations for establishing the Greek text in use at that time is even more tenuous than consulting the secondary translations. The writings of the fathers were themselves copied by scribes who may have edited the quotations to agree with the text known and used in their time and locale. Therefore, the textual critic must first establish how patristic writers originally quoted the passage. Moreover, one cannot be sure that they quoted a biblical verse word-for-word. They may have paraphrased it or omitted short phrases that were irrelevant to their point." Ref-0838, p. 68.

☉ "... Higher Criticism is a mere travesty of all true criticism. Secular writers are presumed to be trustworthy unless reason is found to discredit their testimony. But the Higher Criticism starts with the assumption that everything in Scripture needs to be confirmed by external evidence. It reeks of its evil origin in German infidelity. My indictment of it, therefore, is not that it is criticism, but that it is criticism of a low and spurious type. . . . True criticism seeks to elucidate the truth: the Higher Criticism aims at establishing prejudged results." Ref-0745, pp. xi-xii. "What the dissecting-room is to the physician criticism is to the theologian. In its proper sphere it is most valuable; and it has made large additions to our knowledge of the Bible. But it demands not only skill and care, but reverence; and if these be wanting, it cannot fail to be mischievous." Ref-0745, p. 3. "The Higher Criticism, as a rationalistic crusade, has set itself to account for the Bible on natural principles; . . ." Ref-0745, p. 11. "As Hodges boldly stated: 'It would scarcely be worth-while [sic] in the present discussion to become mired in the ever shifting morass of theories which occupy present-day source criticism. New Testament studies are not advanced by an infatuation with processes we did not witness and with documents we do not, and cannot, possess.'" Jack Russell Shaffer, "A Harmonization of Matt 8:5-13 and Luke 7:1-10", Ref-0167 Volume 17 Number 1, Spring 2006, 35:50, p. 42.

textual criticism - intrinsic probability :

☉ + "The concept of intrinsic probability can be simply defined by means of an exegetical question: What is the author most likely to have written? A more concrete way of formulating the question is: Which of the variants best fits the context?" Ref-0838, p. 126. See textual criticism - transcriptional probability.

textual criticism - longer reading - original :

☉ + "However, the evidence available now shows that such [longer] readings are neither a result or proof of late editing, but actually go back into the second century. If this is true even for some conflate and longer readings, then it should be apparent that the procedure of using a few examples of long or conflate readings in order to prove the late and dependent editing process for the whole text is invalid." Ref-0787, p. 83. "This underscores the danger of making it a rule 'to prefer the shorter reading' as more likely the earlier and/or original one. Actually, the length of a reading has nothing to do with its age: long readings are old and short readings are old.

Both are attested by manuscript evidence that places them deep in the second century. The criteria for judging between them must be something other than their respective lengths." Ref-0787, p. 89.

textual criticism - lower criticism :

☉ + "The presence of these errors in the Bible has given rise to a highly advanced science known as textual criticism. This science is also referred to as lower criticism, in contrast to higher criticism. While higher criticism devotes itself to such things as the study of author ship, date of composition, and historical value of a given Biblical document, lower criticism is concerned only with the form of words -- the text." Ref-0236, p. 88.

☉ "The traditional fundamental belief in "Preservation" of Scripture was soon replaced by the doctrine of "Restoration". That is, the bizarre notion that over the years some of the true text had become corrupted resulting in the loss of a small yet significant portion of the original readings. The opinion among scholars of the upper echelon was that they could take the numerous extant manuscripts and ancient versions and, by applying the supposed "scientific" techniques and methods of "lower" or textual criticism, restore to the Church and the world at large the original wording. But God had often promised to preserve His Word. It was never implicit in these many promises that He would miraculously preserve the original stones, scrolls, or manuscripts upon which the prophets and apostles wrote. All that was necessary was that the text itself be preserved. This, we aver and asseverate, He has done -- not be a continuing miracle but as the late conservative text critic Edward F. Hills correctly advocated, by providentially preserving it over the centuries thus fulfilling the aforementioned promises. . . . The Roman Catholic structure has long played down the accuracy and faithfulness of God's Word and will continue to do so in order to maintain its dominion over the laity through its pope and priesthood. This ungodly dominion has been historically facilitated in great measure by the practice of using a language no longer familiar to the people in which to conduct the service. Tragically, the Protestant churchmen are rapidly, and often unknowingly, succumbing to the same snare, enmeshing their flocks and going about establishing their own personal control over the faith of the people by a constant overemphasis of Hebrew and/or Greek. Again, that which is being said is that the laity, not knowing the language of the pastor/scholar and having no reliable written witness as his guide simply cannot correctly understand or approach the Deity for himself and must depend upon some other man or religious organization to do this for him. Did the Reformers suffer and perish in vain?" Ref-0186, p. 166. It must be said that the aforementioned quote by Jones is an unfair representation of the beliefs of those who advocate studying the Hebrew and Greek. For one, they do not maintain that the various excellent English translations currently available (including the KJV) are so flawed that one cannot "correctly understand or approach the Deity for himself." For another, it is as if Jones would have us ignore the very fact that a prime motivating factor for the Reformation, and especially underwriting the development of scriptures in the vernacular, such as the KJV, was Erasmus' publication of the Greek New Testament. It was by leaving the previous Latin and returning to the original Greek that the Reformers were able to shed long-held doctrinal errors (e.g., "penance" vs. "repentance") and bring much-needed correction the Roman understanding of the Scriptures which then held sway. For another, those Reformers which preferred English generally used the Geneva Bible, not the KJV which didn't exist until later. And even when it had been published, it took a considerable number of years for the KJV to unseat the Geneva Bible in popularity in the English-speaking world. During this time, were the Reformers (such as Knox) without the Word of God--awaiting for the 1611 KJV and holding on with a flawed version until then? Most certainly not. This over-simplistic view of the ascendancy of the 1611 KJV is a gross misrepresentation of the reality of how Scripture came down to us. To equate a desire to give priority to the Hebrew and Greek with the Roman Catholic insistence of retaining the old Latin is both inaccurate and unfair.

textual criticism - transcriptional probability :

☉ + "In contrast with intrinsic probability, the criterion known as transcriptional probability asks the obverse question: What is a scribe most likely to have done? More specifically, Which of the variants is more likely to have originated, consciously or unconsciously, in the work of a copyist?" Ref-0838, p. 128. - "The Hebrew word for soul is nephesh. It is used seven hundred fifty-four times, but it is not always translated as soul. in fact, forty-five different English words are used to translate this one Hebrew word. The Greek word for soul is psuche. It is used a total of one hundred five times, and seven different English words are used to translate this one Greek word. The Hebrew and Greek words, nephesh and psuche, are used in a number of different ways and translated into a number of different English words, showing that one cannot place a hard and fast meaning on the word soul. The word "soul" emphasizes the nonmaterial, personal being, and it is used

- in sixteen different ways in Scripture.”

thermodynamics - second law and the Fall : ☪ + "Some older creationist literature claims that the second law of thermodynamics began at the Fall. However, the second law is responsible for a number of good things which involve increases in entropy, so are "decay" processes in the thermodynamic sense, but maybe not what most people would imagine are decay: * solar heating of the earth (heat transfer from a hot object to a cold one is the classical case of the second law in motion); * walking (requires the highly entropic phenomenon of friction, otherwise Adam and Eve would have slipped as they walked iwht God in Eden!); * breathing (based on air moving from high pressure to low pressure, producing a more disordered equalized concentration of molecules); * digestion (breaking down large, complex food molecules into their simple building blocks); * baking a cake (mixing the ingredients produces a lot of disorder), etc. Thus, it is a mistake to equate anthropomorphic conceptions of "running down" with thermodynamic entropy increase. It is more likely that God withdrew some of His sustaining power at the Fall. He still sustains the universe (Col. 1:17); otherwise, it would cease to exist." Ref-0232, pp. 213-214.

thief - killed on entry : Ex. 22:2; Jer. 2:34 thief - on cross : Luke 23:39-43 ☪ + "First, the repentant thief recognized the brevity of this life. He understood life's temporal nature because he was dying. The Bible is clear on the topic of the brevity of this life (Ps 103:15-16; Jas 4:14). Thus, all of us should be concerned regarding what will happen to us when this life ends. Second, the penitent thief understood the reality of the afterlife. In other words, he understood that life after death was just as real as the present life. This understanding explains why the repentant thief spoke with such confidence about Christ's coming kingdom (verse 42). The Scripture teaches the reality of the afterlife. Because God has designed the soulish or immaterial part of man to live forever (Eccl 3:11), all people will exist forever, either with God in His kingdom or forever separated from Him in a place of conscious torment (Dan 12:2; Matt 25:46). Third, the repentant thief understood his guilt before God. This understanding is evidenced by his statement in verse 41, "And we indeed are suffering justly, for we are receiving what we deserve for our deeds." He obviously understood the reality of his own guilt since in the first-century Roman world, the reason someone was sentenced to hang on a cross was because he had committed a capital offense. However, it is not just those who have committed terrible crimes who are guilty. The Bible says in Romans 3:23, "For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God." In other words, every member of the human race stands guilty before God because of our sin and our position in the first sinning man, Adam. Fourth, the thief on the cross understood the uniqueness of Jesus Christ. Verse 40 says, "But the other answered, and rebuking him said, "Do you not even fear God?" Here is an indication that he understood that Jesus Christ was God. Verse 41, in reference to Jesus, he said, "but this man has done nothing wrong." Thus, perhaps the penitent thief understood something about Christ's sinless perfection. He recognized that Christ was different than any man he had ever encountered. Of course, this too is a reality that people must understand in order to be saved. Jesus is not one among equals, but the unique God-Man (John 8:58-59; 20:30-31; Rev 19:16). Fifth, the thief understood that Christ had the power to save him. Not only did he understand his own guilt, but he also understood that Jesus, this extraordinary Man, could do something to help him with his specific predicament. Thus, in verse 42, he said, "Jesus, remember me when You come into Your kingdom!" Jesus not only claimed to be God, but He also claimed to have the ability to help men with their primary problem: their guilt and sin before a Holy God. The solution to this dilemma is found in Christ alone (John 14:6; Acts 4:12; 1 Tim 2:5). Sixth, the repentant thief understood that he could not be saved through his own good works or any act of self-righteousness. Self-righteousness means that human beings can do something to merit favor from God. Since this thief was nailed to a cross, what acts of self-righteousness could he do? He could not join a church, do good deeds, or even be baptized. He was in a helpless position. We also are in a similar helpless position since we are incapable of doing any sort of righteous act to merit God's favor. God sees our acts of self-righteousness as a filthy garment, if we are using them to gain favor from Him (Isa 64:6). Seventh, this thief understood that it is never too late to ask God for salvation. Although he knew that his death was imminent, he still believed it was not too late to cry out to Christ for mercy. Although guilty of a capital crime and dying, he did not believe that it was too late for him to experience divine grace. The thief's persuasion proved correct as Christ gave him immediate validation of salvation, "Truly I say to you, today you shall be with Me in Paradise" (vs. 43)." "This book contains: the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrine is holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be saved, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter. Here heaven is opened, and the gates of hell disclosed. Christ is its grand subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently, and prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, health to the soul, and a river of pleasure. It is given to you here in this life, will be opened at the Judgment, and is established forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and condemn all who trifle with its contents.” -- Author unknown, cited in Richard L. Mayhue, The Authority of Scripture, Ref-0164, Vol. 15 No. 2, Fall 2004, 227:236, p. 236. : quote - bible contents this generation - future - Mayhue : 2003052202.tif☆

Thomas - Gospel of : ☩ “As for the Gospel of Thomas mentioned by Eusebius, that seems to be a gnostic work quoted by Hippolytus and stigmatized as heretical by Origen; its relation to the Gospel of Thomas found among the Nag Hammadi documents in 1945 is uncertain, but they are certainly not identical.” Ref-0073, p. 201. “However, after an individual assessment of each saying in Thomas, scholar Hans-Josef Klauck concluded that some 50 percent of the sayings have no contact with anything recorded in the New Testament. Could that much material have been overlooked by the canonical Gospel writers? If, though, the writing of Thomas postdates the apostolic era, then this 50 percent was not used by the apostles (or even the apostolic Fathers) because it did not yet exist.” Ref-0818, p. 178. “. . . Perrin mounts a withering attack on the supposed first-century date of the Gospel of Thomas [GT], and brings his considerable knowledge of both Coptic and Syriac to bear on the questions of both the dating and the conceptual world in which the author of the GT lived and wrote. . . . he has established beyond doubt that the author of GT drew on the first Gospel harmony, the Diatessaron by Tatian, which was completed in Syria around A.D. 173. He does this by a painstaking comparison of some Jesus sayings in Tatian’s Diatessaron with how they are expressed in GT. The sayings are closer to the Diatessaron than to the canonical Gospels. He also illustrates that the aberrant theology of Tatian, a mix of Hermeticism and anti-Jewish mysticism, can be clearly discerned in GT. The conclusion is simple. If the GT was penned after A.D. 173, it does not derive from the first century and its value as another source for understanding the “real” Jesus is sorely diminished! . . . Perrin has some perceptive comments about the Jesus that emerge[s] from the documents. He is a teacher who does no miracles, who does not die and rise again, who has shed all his Jewish context, and who provides no objective salvation for anyone, but points people to know themselves from within.” Nicholas Perrin, “Thomas: The Other Gospel”, reviewed by William Varner, Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 71:90, p. 135.

If he could orbit close enough, he might even get into a time zone where his "clocks" run a thousand times slower. Outside observers would see his signals enormously redshifted. They would need a week to record his daily ten-minute report, but it would arrive only once every three years. When checking his heart, they would hear it beat once every 20 minutes. However, and this is the important thing, the astronomer would notice nothing different in his own space ship. But he would see strange things from his friends far from the black hole -- everything would appear in super fast-forward. Their signals would be blueshifted, a daily news bulletin would arrive every 90 seconds, a U.S. president would be elected five times a week. If he listened to their heartbeats, they would just be a high-pitched hum. But not for long -- after a few weeks of the astronaut's time, all his friends might be dead. After ten years of orbiting, he would return to the earth and find that 10,000 years have passed and his "own" time is relegated to a few lines in an ancient history book." Ref-0232, p. 191. Therefore, if two prophesied events are imminent [the rapture and the beginning of the Day of the Lord], neither can precede the other. . . . If both the rapture of the church and the beginning of the day of the Lord are occurrences that could come at any moment, the timing of the rapture is not open for debate. The only way that both events could be imminent is for them to be simultaneous. If one preceded the other even by a brief moment, the other would not be imminent because of the sign provided by the earlier happening. "The Times of the Gentiles can best be defined as that long period of time from the Babylonian Empire to the Second Coming of the Messiah during which time the Gentiles have dominion over the City of Jerusalem. This does not rule out temporary Jewish control of the city, but all such Jewish control will be temporary until the Second Coming. Such temporary control was exercised during the Maccabean Period (164-63 B.C.), the First Jewish Revolt against Rome (A.D. 66-70), the Second Jewish Revolt (the Bar Cochba Revolt) against Rome (A.D. 132-135), and since 1967 as a result of the Six Day War. This too, is temporary, as Gentiles will yet tread Jerusalem down for at least another 3 1/2 years (Rev. 11:1-2). Any Jewish takeover of the City of Jerusalem before the Second Coming must therefore be viewed as a temporary one and does not mean that the Times of the Gentiles have ended. The Times of the Gentiles can only end when the Gentiles can no longer tread down the City of Jerusalem." Ref-0219, p. 21. The Times of the Gentiles began with the judgment and overthrow of Zedekiah, the last king of Judah (Eze. 21:10,13,25-27) and continues so long as there is no legitimate ruler seated on the Davidic throne (Gen. 49:10 cf. Eze. 21:27). "In partial fulfillment of Christ's prophecy, a vital part of UN Resolution 181 was the declaration that Jerusalem would be a corpus separatum, never part of Israel and never under the control of Jews." Ref-0017, Vol. XXIV No. 6 June 2009, p. 4. "On December 7, 1949, the Special Political Committee of the United Nations General Assembly made its decision regarding the internationalization of Jerusalem, approving this action by a final vote of 35 to 13, with 11 abstentions. Oddly enough, the strongest opposition to this proposal was led by the United States and Great Britain. In part, the text of the resolution reads that it is the intention of the General Assembly of the United Nations, "that Jerusalem should be placed under a permanent international regime . . . (1) That the city of Jerusalem shall established as a 'corpus separatum' under an international regime and (2) shall be administered by the United Nations (3) The city of Jerusalem shall include the present municipality of Jerusalem, plus the surrounding villages and towns the most southern being Bethlehem, the most western Ein Karem, and the most northern Shufat." Ref-1163, pp. 71-72. "The famous Lutheran New Testament scholar Dr. R. C. H. Lenski, in his truly superb commentary on Luke's Gospel, written in 1934, introduces some modern data in saying, "The Zionist movement today is the latest attempt of the Jews to repossess their land, and it has failed." . . . He then gives a translation which I have not found anywhere else, stating that the Greek verb is durative [in Luke 21:24] and the phrase should be translated "Jerusalem shall continue to be trampled by the Gentiles" and then insists that this situation will continue to the time of the Second Advent. He follows Luther in saying, "God is done with the Jews as a nation." Dr. Norval Geldenhuys in his recent work on Luke's Gospel (1951) introduces something which no one would think the text even implied when he says that "Christ nowhere implies that the times of the Gentiles will be followed by Jewish dominion over the nations," and rejects the idea of a Jewish kingdom. The one commentator, as far as my knowledge of this literature extends, who most satisfactorily deals with this final clause, is Bishop J. C. Ryle, in his great work, Expository Thoughts on the Gospels. "A fixed period is here foretold during which Jerusalem was to be given over into the hands of Gentile rulers, and the Jews were to have no dominion over their ancient city. A fixed period is likewise foretold which was to be the time of the Gentiles' visitation, the time during which they were to enjoy privileges, and occupy a position something like that of Israel in ancient days . . . Both periods are one day to end. Jerusalem is to be once more restored to its ancient inhabitants. The Gentiles, because of their hardness and unbelief, are to be stripped of their privileges and endure just judgments of God. But the times of the Gentiles are not yet run out. We ourselves are living within them at the present day. The subject before us is a very affecting one and ought to raise within us great searchings of heart. While the nations of Europe are absorbed in political conflicts and worldly business, the sands of their hourglass are ebbing away. While governments are disputing about secular things, and parliaments can hardly condescend to find a place for religion in their discussions, their days are numbered in the mind of God. Yet a few years, and 'the times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled.' Their days of visitation will be past and gone. Their misused privileges will be taken away. The judgments of God shall fall on them. They shall be cast aside as vessels in which God has no pleasure. Their dominion shall crumble away, and their vaunted institutions shall fall to pieces. The Jews shall be restored. The Lord Jesus shall come again in power and great glory. The kingdom of this world shall become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ, and 'the times of the Gentiles' shall come to an end. Happy is he who knows these things, and lives the life of faith in the Son of God! He is the man, and he only, who is ready for the great things coming on this earth, and the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ. The kingdom to which he belongs, is the only kingdom which shall never be destroyed. The King whom he serves, is the only King whose dominion shall never be taken away (Dan. 2:44; 7:14)." [J. C. Ryle: Expository Thoughts on the Gospels, St. Luke, Vol. II, p. 373. Rev. ed., London, 1910] (This is not to be found in a recently published "Anniversary Edition" of Ryles' work.) Ref-1163, pp. 96-98. "I am not an alarmist, and I trust through the years I have never attached to any world event a prophetic significance that was not justified; but it seems to me that almost any day or night this prophecy of our Lord could be fulfilled. Already there are more Jews living in Jerusalem than there were Jews living in the whole of Palestine at the dawn of this century. Furthermore, there is a government of a newborn nation in the modern city of Jerusalem--Israel. One hundred feet of no man's land, some barbed wired fences, and a few machine guns manned by a mere handful of Arabs--these are all that keep the Jews from fully occupying this city and setting up their government there. Why the Jews do not go in and take that city, I do not know; they certainly could do it. It may be that God will not permit this for some time. It may be that the Jews would enter into the city, capture it, attempt to set up their government, and bring down upon themselves the power and wrath of the nations of the earth, and then this prophecy would not yet be fulfilled; for when it is fulfilled, Jerusalem will never again be trodden down of the Gentiles. I am only saying that, for the first time in all these two thousand years, we are amazingly near to the possibility of the fulfillment of this verse." [Wilbur M. Smith: World Crises and the Prophetic Scriptures, Chicago, 1952, p. 235] cited in Ref-1163, pp. 98-99. "The times of the Gentiles may be defined as when there is no ruler [sic] monarch on David's throne. At the time of Daniel, Babylon was ruling, and there was no Davidic Monarch reigning in Israel from David's throne in Jerusalem." Ref-1216, p. 133. Note that none of men in the Davidic line leading to Jesus are referred to as 'king' following the Babylonian captivity (Shealtiel through Joseph, Mtt. 1:12-16). Zerubbabel, who qualifies as a leader on the return from Babylon is only ever referred to as 'governor' (Ezra 5:14; Hag. 1:1,14; 2:2) and 'prince,' (Ezra 1:8-9) but never 'king.' "I believe that these times of ours (as also all the times of the four monarchies [Dan 2]) are the times of the Gentiles; and that Jerusalem and Israel shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. [H. Bonar, "The Jew," The Quarterly Journal of Prophecy (July, 1870): 211]" Ref-1263, p. 10. ". . . consider the rather imprudent prognostication of Philip Mauro who wrote that should Jerusalem "come into Jewish hands again" during the "times of the Gentiles," then "the prophecies would have been falsified and the entire New Testament discredited." [Philip Mauro, The Gospel of the Kingdom, with an Examination of Modern Dispensationalism, ch. 12]" Ref-1263, pp. 62-63 "J. C. Ryle concluded, "While the nations of Europe are absorbed in political conflicts and worldly business, the sands in their hour-glass are ebbing away. While governments are disputing about secular things, the Parliaments can hardly condescend to find a place for religion in their discussions, their days are numbered in the sight of God. Yet a few years and the "times of the Gentiles will be fulfilled." Their day of visitation will be past and gone. Their misused privileges will be taken away. The judgments of God shall fall on them. They shall be cast aside as vessels in which God has no pleasure. Their dominion shall crumble away, and their vaunted institutions shall fall to pieces . . . When [the times of the Gentiles] do end, the conversion of the Jews and the restoration of Jerusalem will take place. . . . The Jews shall be restored. The Lord Jesus shall come again in power and great glory." Ref-1263, p. 230

Since Rev. 22:6 is a statement referring to the whole book of Revelation, it would be impossible to take tachos as a reference to A.D. 70 . . . and at the same time hold that Rev. 20:7-9 teaches the Second Coming. [Moderate preterists] must either adopt a view similar to futurism, or shift to the extreme preterist view that understands the entire book of Revelation as past history, thus eliminating any future Second Coming and resurrection." Ref-0078, p. 112. An example of the use of tachos to describe the manner in which an event occurs (rather than the timing) is provided by G. H. Lang: "tachy does not mean soon but swiftly. It indicates rapidity of action, as is well seen in its accurate use in the medical compound tachycardia (tachy and kardia = the heart), which does not mean that the heart will beat soon, but that it is beating rapidly. Of course, the swift action may take place at the very same time, as in Mtt. 28:7-8. . ." Ref-0055, December 2000, pp. 304-305, quoting G.H. “To begin with we must dismiss the theory of oral transmission as the source of Genesis. It is not logical to expect that a pure document could be transferred orally from one generation to another for hundreds of years. Even Middle Easterners, with their prodigious memories could not do it. Concentration on the role of oral tradition has led scholars to underestimate the role of written records. We believe there is evidence that the Pentateuch in its entirety was written from the beginning, even though that is dismissed by most scholars today. . . . Genesis chapter 5:1 is translated correctly in the NIV: “This is the written account of Adam's line.” (my emphasis) This passage tells of a sepher (book) connected with Adam. The Hebrew word “sepher” always means a written account. Scholars get around this being taken at face value by calling it an “anachronism” entered into the text by later scribes. Or they just avoid it altogether. Some of the most comprehensive Bible commentaries avoid any mention of this situation.” David Livingston, “Writing: Was Hebrew First?” ABR Electronic Newsletter, Vol. 6, Issue 11, November 2006

"William Samarin, a linguistic professor at the University of Toronto, attended numerous Pentecostal and neo-Pentecostal meetings in several countries over a five-year period. At the end of his time, he concluded, 'When the full apparatus of linguistic science comes to bear on glossolalia, this turns out to be only a facade language -- although at times a very good one indeed. For when we comprehend what language is, we must conclude that no glossa, no matter how well constructed, is a specimen of human language, because it is neither internally organized nor systematically related to the world man perceives. . . . Glossolalia is indeed a language in some ways, but this is only because the speaker (unconsciously) wants it to be like a language. Yet in spite of superficial similarities, glossolalia is fundamentally not language.'" Nathan Busenitz, "The Gift of Tongues: Comparing the Church Fathers with Contemporary Pentecostalism", Ref-0167 Volume 17 Number 1, Spring 2006, 61:78, pp. 71-72. ". . . Pentecostal interpretations can have a wide variety of meaning -- even when interpreting the same tongues-message. Kildahl, for example, had several Pentecostal interpreters listen to a single audio recording of glossolalia. After his experiment, he noted, 'In no instances was there any similarity in the several interpretations. The following typifies our results: one interpreter said the tongue-speaker was praying for the health of his children; another that the same tongues-speech was an expression of gratitude to God for a recently successful church fund-raising effort.' But when he confronted the interpreters with the inconsistencies, he was told that "God gave to one person one interpretation and to another person another interpretation.'" tongues - known languages : Acts 2:8; Acts 8:17 (?) ; Acts 10:46; Acts 19:6; 1Cor. 14:21-22 ☪ "In spite of a relative de-emphasis placed on tongues-speaking by the church fathers (who speak of prophecy much more than they do of tongues), they are not altogether silent on the issue. In fact, their collective writings overwhelmingly suggest that they associate tongues-speaking with a supernatural ability to speak rational, authentic foreign languages. That proposition is directly supported by Irenaeus, Hippolytus, Hegemonius, Gregory of Nazianzen, Ambrosiaster, Chrysostom, Augustine, Leo the Great, and implied by others (such as Tertullian and Origen). Such a position is further strengthened by the fathers' equation of the Acts 2 use of the gift with the Corinthian phenomenon (as well as their allusions to Isaiah 28:11 when discussing the NT gift). In several instances, they import their understanding of Acts 2 and Isaiah 28:11

(both of which speak of human foreign languages) into their interpretation of 1 Corinthians 12-14. Yet, they never suggest that the tongues experienced by the apostles at Pentecost were different from the tongues experienced by the Corinthian believers. Moreover, the patristic writers never hint at the possibility of two types of tongues-speaking." tongues - not all speak with : 1Cor. 12:13; 1Cor. 12:30 ☪ All are baptized, not all speak with tongues. "The patristic writings further evidence that all Christians did not speak in tongues. Not only did none of the church fathers claim to speak in tongues personally, they consistently expressed their believe that not every Christian receives that gift (or any one gift, for that matter). Clement of Alexandria explains that "each [believer] has his own proper gift of God -- one in one way, another in another." Hippolytus is even more explicit: "It is not necessary that every one of the faithful should cast out demons, raise the dead, or speak with tongues. But only such a one who has been graciously given the gift -- for the purpose that it may be advantageous to the salvation of unbelievers." Ambrose echoes, "Not all, says he, have the gift of healings, nor do all, says he, speak with tongues. For the whole of the divine gifts cannot exist in each several man." And Chrysostom, Jerome, Augustine, and Theodoret of Cyrus agree. The chorus of evidence is overwhelming. The church fathers did not believe that every believer received the same spiritual endowment from the Holy Spirit. Some were gifted with tongues while others were gifted in other ways." tongues - not always languages? : 1Cor. 13:1; 1Cor. 14:14; 2Cor. 12:4 ☪ "If the expression 'tongues of men and angels' (1Cor. 13:1) be appealed to [as an indication that tongues were ecstatic in nature], it is sufficient to note that the first three verses of the chapter have a pronounced hyperbolic character. While angels no doubt have languages of their own, the apostle no more implies that he expects the readers to use them than that he expects them to give their bodies to be burned (v. 3)." Zane C. Hodges, "The Purpose of Tongues", Ref-0200, 120 (July-September 1963): 231, cited in Ref-0115, p. 137. "The apostle no more implies that he himself spoke angel languages than he implies that he knew all mysteries and all knowledge and had given his body to be burned." Ref-0115, endnote 64, p. 160. "As one has noted, "The condition ἐάν λαλῶ is of the third class, a supposable case," or as another states, "ἐάν λαλῶ supposes a case which never has been exemplified: 'even if I can speak,' or as E.V. 'thought I speak.'" As Meyers puts it, "It supposes something, that actual existence of which is left dependent on the circumstances: assuming it to be the case, that I speak, etc . . . The tongues of angels here spoken are certainly only an abstract conception.” Donald G. McDougall, “Cessationism in 1_Cor_13:8-12”, Ref-0164, 14/2 (Fall 2003) 177-213, p. 194.

tongues - overemphasized : ☩ + “Clearly, that emphasis on tongues contrasts with the patristic de-emphasis. Whereas the writings of the early fathers seldom mention the gift, contemporary Pentecostal writings constantly highlight it. “The question which Pentecostals have difficulty answering when they stress the significance of glossolalia is: If glossolalia is so significant, why has its history been so spotty, almost nonexistent from the apostolic age to about 1650?” Or why has a gift that is mentioned only occasionally and tangentially by the church fathers become one of the foundational pillars of Pentecostal practice?” Nathan Busenitz, “The Gift of Tongues: Comparing the Church Fathers with Contemporary Pentecostalism”, Ref-0167 Volume 17 Number 1, Spring 2006, 61:78, p. 69.

tongues - Pentecostal definition by practice :

☩ + “. . . an honest Pentecostal description of tongues (at least in its practical outworking) might be stated as follows: The gift of tongues includes the ability to speak in a spiritual language (which has no definable relationship to any authentic rational language) either for the church for for personal edification. If intended for the church, tongues are interpreted by those with the gift of interpretation (with various meanings derived from the same message). If intended for personal edification, the message is not interpreted at all. On the whole, tongues-speaking is often a self-induced phenomenon, available to all who are willing to learn it. Though some Pentecost leaders may not endorse this description verbatim, it accurately reflects their writings and parallels the history and practice of tongues-speech in their ecclesiastical circles.” Nathan Busenitz, “The Gift of Tongues: Comparing the Church Fathers with Contemporary Pentecostalism”, Ref-0167 Volume 17 Number 1, Spring 2006, 61:78, p. 78.

Torah : ☩ From Hebrew “tora” = law. The first five books of the Hebrew Scriptures (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy.) Also known by Gentiles as the Pentateuch. “Torah, which is often translated ‘law,’ has, of course, a far greater compass than the sum of certain rules or regulations. The verbal root from which the noun is formed means ‘to shoot,’ that is, to mark the direction pointed out by an arrow. Torah thus combines elements of revelation and teaching of which legislation forms only a part. Torah means the total directive will of God as exhibited in creation, history, redemption, and the uttered word of judgment and salvation. It includes grace and law.” Ref-0023, p. 172.

Tozer - A. W. - weaknesses : ☉ + “However, there were at least three troubling elements in Tozer’s life. First, his involvement with the Christian and Missionary Alliance was far more active than most realize. The Alliance was founded upon a “Four-Fold Gospel”: Christ as Savior, Sanctifier, Healer, and coming King . . . At least two of these elements could present doctrinal problems to many of Tozer’s followers. Christ as Sanctifier meant the Holiness movement’s understanding of a second work of grace complete with baptism by the Holy Spirit which supposedly brought the believer into a higher level of Christian life. Christ as Healer meant physical healing was seen as a provision of the atonement. While Tozer apparently did not conduct healing services, he believed in them and participated with others who conducted such services. Secondly, Tozer’s endorsement and love for Catholic mystics is problematic. While not agreeing with all their theology, Tozer truly believed that mystics such as Bernard of Clairvaux, Peter Abelard, Frederick Faber, Jeanne Guyon, Meister Eckhart, and Thomas Merton knew something about intimacy with God that the evangelical world had missed. Much of Tozer’s methodology for seeking God was not formulated by Scripture but by the mystics. Even his natural tendency to remain aloof from people was justified by Thomas ? Kempis’ form of Christianity, not the Bible . . . Thirdly, while Tozer sought, and apparently found, intimacy with God, he neither sought nor had intimacy with people. After church services, Tozer shunned conversation with adults and often escaped into the nursery. He refused to do counseling, pastoral, or hospital visits. Very few people were ever allowed to know him and this included his family. He rejected involvement with extended family, which was a source of pain for his immediate family. With the exception of his younger child and only daughter, his children felt estranged from their father. Tozer had time for God and preaching but little time for family. However, the greatest estrangement was from his wife Ada. Tozer seemed to lack closeness with Ada almost from the beginning of their marriage, and he did not seem to consider here feelings nor consult her even regarding important matters. A year after Tozer’s death, Ada remarried and, when asked about here happiness, consistently replied: “I have never been happier in my life. Aiden (Tozer) loved Jesus Christ, but Leonard Odam loves me” . . . One has to wonder how a man who sought such intimacy with God could shun intimacy with his own wife and children.” Gary E. Gilley, Book Review: “A Passion for God: The Spiritual Journey of A. W. Tozer”, Ref-0785,

The fact that the most popular preacher in Wales is one who has never undergone a theological training, after their example, manifestly serves to demonstrate to the point of proof that such training is not really necessary for a successful ministry. It is that consideration which has upset their professional equilibrium and made them jealous of his phenomenal success. They would rather see him leave the connexion than remain in it as a perpetual reproach to the men who have emerged from the denominational colleges with the full flavour of academic distinction, but who, notwithstanding, are utterly unable to attract the masses to their half-empty churches. transfiguration - Jesus : Mtt. 17:2; Mark 9:2; Luke 9:29 ☉ “We have μεταμορφώματι in Matthew 17:2. The best the English can do is give us the word “transfigure,” which Webster defines as follows: “to change the form or appearance of.” What we have in the translation is the fact that our Lord’s outward appearance was changed. And that is true. But see how much more we get from the Greek word. μορφή referred, you remember, to the outward expression one gives of his inner nature, that outward expression proceeding from and being representative of that inner nature. μορφοῦμαι refers therefore to the act of giving outward expression to that nature, that outward expression proceeding from and being truly representative of that nature. The verb here is in the passive voice. μετέ, when prefixed to the verb, signifies a change. Thus, we translate “The mode of His outward expression was changed before them, that outward expression proceeding from and being truly representative of His inner nature.”” Ref-0946, p. 86. There is evidence this took place in association with the Feast of Tabernacles: “In each of the accounts of the transfiguration (Mtt. 17:1-9; Mark 9:2-10; Luke 9:29-36), as Peter calls for constructing three “booths,” the Greek work is skēnē the translation of sukkah, the name of both the feast and the structures in which men lived during it. Luke 9:31 says the conversation between Jesus, Moses, and Elijah was “of his departure, which he was about to accomplish at Jerusalem.” The Greek word translated “departure” is exodus, the historical event commemorated at the Feast of Booths.” Ref-1200, p. 161n24.

translation - difficulties : ☉ + “Each tongue has its own history and genius. Parallel idioms may or may not exist in a group of languages. Sanskrit and Latin, for instance, have no article. It is not possible to parallel the Hebrew tenses, for example, with the Greek, nor, indeed, can it be done as between Greek and English. The English translation of a Greek aorist may have to be in the past perfect or the present perfect to suit the English usage, but that proves nothing as to how a Greek regarded the aorist tense. We must assume in a language that a good writer knew how to use his own tongue and said what he meant to say. Good Greek may be very poor English, as when Luke uses ἐν τῷ εἰσαγαγεῖν τοὺς γονεῖς τὸ παιδίον Ἰησοῦν (Lu. 2:27). A literal translation of this neat Greek idiom makes barbarous English. The Greeks simply did not look at this clause as we do. "One of the commonest and gravest errors in studying the grammar of foreign languages is to make a half-conjectural translation, and then reason back from our own language to the meaning of the original; or to explain some idiom of the original by the formally different idiom which is our substantial equivalent." Ref-1236, pp. 46-49.

translation - dynamic equivalence - Nida :

☪ + "The person who almost single-handedly changed the course of English Bible translation was Eugene Nida, who championed his theory of "dynamic equivalence." This theory was first introduced by Nida in the mid-twentieth century. Briefly stated, the theory of dynamic equivalence in Bible translation emphasizes the reaction of the reader to the translated text, rather than the translation of the words and phrases themselves. In simplest terms, dynamic equivalency is often referred to as "thought for thought" translation as compared to "essentially literal" translation. . . ." Ref-0240, p. 13.

☪ + "As a general rule, dynamic equivalence dedicates itself to the elimination of ambiguities. . . . Formal-equivalence translations handle ambiguities in exactly the opposite way. In the receptor rendering, they maintain as far as possible the ambiguity that exists in the source language." Ref-0231, pp. 84, 86. "Ray Van Leeuwen says with his usual good sense, "It is hard to know what the Bible means when we are uncertain about what it says. . . . The problem with [functional equivalence] translations (i.e., most modern translations) is that they prevent the reader from inferring biblical meaning because they change what the Bible said."" Ref-0240, pp. 84-85. For a list of ways in which dynamic equivalence translations can short-circuit the interpretive process, see Ref-0240, p. 141. "The only way readers of a dynamic equivalent translation can have confidence in a given translation is to remain ignorant of two things that, if confronted, should undermine their confidence in their chosen translation. (1) They need to stick to just one translation, because the moment they start reading other dynamic equivalent translations they will frequently see how consistently these translations contradict each other. (2) Readers of dynamic equivalent translation had also better not compare their translation to a literal translation, because when they do, they should, at least, be unsettled by all that has been added and changed from what the original text actually contains." Ref-0240, p. 195. "Let me cite some random specimens. "The love of Christ constrains us," says 2 Corinthians 5:14 (RSV, NASB, REB, JB, ESV). Does this mean "our love for Christ" or "Christ's love for use"? Probably both, but in any case the original leaves the door open to both interpretations. One-dimensional, simplified translations make a preemptive interpretive strike, translating the statement as

"Christ's love" (NIV, CEV, NLT). Psalm 90:12 states, "So teach us to number our days" ("number our days aright," NIV). Numbering our days is a difficult image that requires interpretation and does not carry its meaning on the surface. Does it mean to ponder or pay close attention to, as we do when we count ("number") objects? Does the image of numbering mean to tally up as our days unfold, with the implied meaning of looking back and making sense of our past days? Does numbering one's days mean counting them with a view toward seeing how few they are? Is the imagery of numbering our days a code word for valuing our days? Is it a code word for using our days appropriately? Is this statement a continuation of the negative view of time that has prevailed up to this point in the psalm, or is it a positive and hopeful antidote to the melancholy view of time's passing that has preceded in the psalm? All of these interpretations have been validly argued by the commentators. An essentially literal translation keeps the door open to all valid interpretations simply by retaining the language of the original: "teach us to number our days." Translators who do not want to pass on the ambiguity or potentially multiple meanings to the readers resolve the issue by narrowing and simplifying the text to a single meaning: "so make us know how few are our days" (REB); "teach us how short our life is" (GNB); "teach us to make the most of our time" (NLT). All of these translations are possible, but all of the translations just quoted reduce the options to just one possibility. In a word, they simplify, whereas translations that render the verse literally preserve the full richness and exegetical potential of the text. . . . In the urge to relieve the allegedly inexpert readers from the need to make interpretive decisions, and to guard readers from misinterpretation, dynamic equivalence translators overlook one important thing: in the overwhelming number of instances where these translators believe that they need to change, explain, or clarify the original, the original authors could have said it that way and chose not to. . . . At the heart of the dynamic equivalence experiment is the attempt to fix the assumed inadequacies of the Bible for modern readers. This maneuver is not an example of sophistication as opposed to the naive; it is instead an unwarranted affront to the original authors (an extension of the "what the author was trying to say" fallacy that has become so prevalent." Leland Ryken, "Five Myths About Essentially Literal Bible Translation", Ref-0786, 57:76, pp. 67-68. "Does your passage contain words or phrases that originally were genuinely ambiguous? If so, try to reproduce rather than mask the ambiguity in your English translation. A good translation is one that creates the same general impression for the hearer as the original would, without distorting the particular content conveyed." Ref-0749, p. 8.

translation - dynamic equivalence - capital punishment :

Rom. 13:4 ☪ + "But some dynamic equivalence translations omit the word "sword." The New Living Translation says: "The authorities are sent by God to help you. But if you are doing something wrong, of course you should be afraid, for you will be punished. The authorities are established by God for that very purpose, to punish those who do wrong.' . . . The New Century Version does something similar: 'The ruler is God's servant to help you. But if you do wrong, then be afraid. He has the power to punish; he is God's servant to punish those who do wrong.' . . . The Contemporary English Version similarly omits the sword: 'If you do something wrong, you ought to be afraid because these rulers have the right to punish you.' The Message strays even further from the sense of the text: 'But if you're breaking the rules right and left, watch out. The police aren't there just to be admired in their uniforms.'" Wayne Grudem, "Are Only Some Words of Scripture Breathed Out by God?", Ref-0786, 19:56, p. 32.

☪ + "Here the translators' avowed aim is to induce, directly or immediately, the same positive complex of compelling interest and intellectual, emotional, and volitional response that the original writers sought to trigger in their own readership, and the developed method is to modify the wording and imagery of the text as a means to this end. . . . When missionaries translating the New Testament for Arctic-dwellers designated the Lord Jesus Christ "the seal of God," because their intended readers did not know what a lamb was, perhaps it did not matter, and perhaps it was the best that could be done. Whether that is so when the original is intelligible and the change is only for warmth and chattiness is, however, more doubtful." J. I. Packer, "Forward", Ref-0786, 9:13, pp. 11,12.

☪ + "When dynamic equivalence translations again and again leave out the meaning of words that are there in the original Hebrew and Greek texts, and when they again and again add meanings that have no basis in the words of the original texts, they do not seem to me to be placing adequate emphasis on all the words of Scripture as the very words of God. By contrast, essentially literal translations seek to translate faithfully the contextually understood meanings of every word in the original texts. Therefore it seems to me that belief in the plenary inspiration of Scripture -- the idea that all the words of Scripture are the words of God -- strongly favors essentially literal translation of the Bible, and seriously calls into question the theory of dynamic equivalence translation." Wayne Grudem, "Are Only Some Words of Scripture Breathed Out by God?", Ref-0786, 19:56, pp. 55-56.

☪ + "I will state my critique of the readability fallacy very succinctly: what good is readability if what the reader reads is not what the original text of the Bible says? If it is not what the original text says, a so-called readable translation has actually removed the Bible from the reader, not, as is claimed, brought the Bible close to the reader." Leland Ryken, "Five Myths About Essentially Literal Bible Translation", Ref-0786, 57:76, p. 74.

translation - dynamic equivalence - rod - discipline :

Pr. 13:24; Pr. 22:15 ☪ Dynamic equivalence translations tend to omit the reference to "rod" (shēbet), using alternate terms and phrases: "discipline" (Pr. 13:24; 22:15 NLT); "punish," "punishment" (Pr. 13:24; 22:15 NCV); "correct," "firm correction" (Pr.

13:24; 22:15 CEV); "correct," "tough-minded discipline" (Pr. 13:24; 22:15 Message).

translation - dynamic equivalence - subjectivity :

☉ + "There is today a general religious bias toward a galloping subjectivity. But our first obligation to a text is to let it hang there in celestial objectivity -- not to ask what it means to us. . . . There's something in the mood of our culture that hates that. . . . The text had a particular meaning before we saw it, and it will continue to mean that after I have seen it. It expressed an intention that is meant to be heard by all, not interpreted according to any one individual's preferences or biases." Joseph Sittler, "Provocations on the Church and the Arts," Christian Century, March 19, 1986, 294 cited in Ref-0240, p. 185.

☉ + "A last question relates to the use of a D.E. product in ministry: How shall I deal with the problem that the high degree of interpretation in a D.E. work makes it unsuitable for close study by those who do not know the original languages? The answer to this question will depend on the type of preaching and teaching one does. If his approach is general, dealing only with broad subjects, he perhaps will not be too bothered by this characteristic. But if he at times treats specific doctrinal issues and wants to stress this or that detail of the text, the present of a large interpretive element in his basic text will pose problems. He will inevitably encounter renderings that differ from the view he wants to represent in his message -- a problem that is largely precluded in using formal-equivalence translation. If a preacher has to correct his translation too often, people will soon look upon it as unreliable and reflect doubts about either the translation itself or the larger issue of biblical inspiration." Ref-0231, p. 96. "To put it bluntly, what good is readability if a translation does not accurately render what the Bible actually says? If a translation gains readability by departing from the original, readability is harmful. It is, after all, the truth of the Bible that we want. The farther a translation feels free to depart from the original text, the more readable contemporary readers find it, just as a seventh-grade reading book is easier to read than a novel by Dickens or C. S. Lewis's space trilogy." Ref-0240, p. 91. "The only legitimate appeal to readability comes within the confines of a translation's having been truthful to the language of the original. Faithfulness to what the Bible actually says is like a qualifying exam. If a translation does not give us that, it has failed the test, and we can be excused from inquiring into its readability." Ref-0240, p. 92. "What are the results of elevating the Bible reader to the status of the one who determines the shape of an English translation? Well, what are customary commendations of this or that English translation? "I like this translation. It speaks to me." "I find this translation refreshing." "This translation makes the Bible come alive for me." All of these commendations assume that the ultimate court of appeal is the reader. None of them is rooted in fidelity to the biblical text and its authors." Ref-0240, p. 117. "The true verdict seems to be that for beginners in Bible exploration and study, the merits of the best dynamic equivalent translations outweigh their real limitations. But for lifelong personal reading, with meditation and memorization, just as for public reading and pulpit exposition in church, the better option will unquestionably be one of the essentially literal translations; . . ." J. I. Packer, "Forward", Ref-0786, 9:13, pp. 11,12. "In the rest of this chapter, I will argue that the things the Bible claims about its own characteristics lead to the conclusion that essentially literal translations are more compatible with the Bible's teaching about itself." translation - literal - myths : ☉ + "I will summarize my five main points by stating them in a format that corrects the misconceptions that detractors of essentially literal translations have asserted. (1) When essentially literal translators respect and preserve the words of the original, they are not engaging in idolatry but instead practicing what the Bible itself says about the primacy of words in God's revelation of his truth in Scripture. (2) There are two ways in which essentially literal translations are simple or naive, namely, in being uninterested in complex linguistic theory and in sticking with translation rather than mingling commentary and editorializing with the translation. Dynamic translation is naive in more ways than this. (3) Essential literal translations are genuine translations, not transcriptions or transliterations. (4). Essentially literal translations make a necessary distinction between linguistic or lexical interpretation and other types of interpretation, and refuse to add the activities of the exegete and the editor to the task for the translator. (5) Essentially literal translations are fully readable, and where their renderings are difficult or do not carry all of the meaning on the surface, they are being true to the original text." Earl Radmacher and Zane Hodges name five "present-day problems" in regard to the English Bible in Christian circles. While these cannot be absolutely proven, they agree completely with what I have observed for a long time. The problems are these: * decreasing confidence in the inspired text; * decreasing basis for correct interpretation; * decreasing use of Scripture in the worship service; * decreasing expository preaching from the Bible; * decreasing memorization of Scripture. To these I would add a decrease in biblical literacy, by which I mean a knowledge of the content of the Bible by the cross section of the believing community." Ref-0240, pp. 188-189.

"Now your grammatical experts will no doubt tell you that this is a 'plural of majesty'. But that's because they are guessing. We could probably give a better guess than that. Nobody is in a position to show that in Moses' day or earlier, people were in the habit of addressing kings and princes in the plural. In fact, there is no evidence at all from the Bible itself, and the Bible is one of the oldest books there is. . . . The custom of using the plural was certainly in being during the Middle Ages of Europe, but we have no evidence of it in the East or in earlier times. So it's much more likely that it is a simple plural indicating plurality. So am I saying that we should translate the word as 'gods'? . . . But that too, is impossible, because the word 'created' in the same sentence is singular. There must, then, be something plural about the Person of God Himself." Ref-0172, s.v. Elohim. "[The plurality of God in Gen. 1:26; 11:7; and Isa. 6:8] has been incorrectly explained [as a plural of majesty]. It is however, either communicative (including the attendant angels; so at all events is in Isa. 6:8, cf. also Gen. 3:22), or according to others, an indication of the the fullness of power and might implied in אֱלֹהִים (see Dillmann on Gen. 1:26); but it is best explained as a plural of self-deliberation. The use of the plural as a form of respectful address is quite foreign to Hebrew." Ref-0173, p. 124f2, p. 398. [The self-deliberation view is suspect when one considers OT passages (e.g., Ps. 2; 45:2; 110:1) wherein a conversation is held between members of the Godhead.] "Targum Yonasan paraphrases: "And God said to the ministering angels who had been created on the second day of Creation of the world, 'Let us make Man.'" When Moses wrote the Torah and came to this verse (let us make), which is in the plural and implies . . . that there is more than one Creator, he said: "Sovereign of the Universe! Why do You thus furnish a pretext for heretics to maintain that there is plurality of divinities?" "Write!" God replied. "Whoever wishes to err will err . . . Instead, let them learn from their Creator Who created all, yet when He came to create Man He took counsel with the ministering angels" (Midrash). Ref-0196, p. 4. "The plural construction (Let us . . .) most likely reflects a setting in the divine council (cf. 1 Kings 22:19-22; Isa. 6; Job 1; 2); God the King announces the proposed course of action to His cabinet of subordinate deities, though He alone retains the power of decision. . . . one midrash . . . reports that while the angels were debating the proposal among themselves, God took the matter in hand: "Why are you debating?" he asked them. "Man has already been created!" (Gen. Rab. 8.5)." Ref-0934, p. 14. The Stone edition renders "one of us" by "[the Unique] One [among] us" whereas the JPS has the simple Hebrew "one of us." "No man can fully explain the Trinity, though in every age scholars have propounded theories and advanced hypotheses to explore this mysterious Biblical teaching. But despite the worthy efforts of these scholars, the Trinity is still largely incomprehensible to the mind of man. Perhaps the chief reason for this is that the Trinity is a-logical, or beyond logic. It, therefore, cannot be made subject to human reason or logic. Because of this, opponents of the doctrine argue that the idea of the Trinity must be rejected as untenable. Such thinking, however, makes man's corrupted human reason the sole criterion for determining the truth of divine revelation." Trinity - of man : 1Th. 5:23

Trinity - or Semitic triplet? : Jer. 22:29; Eze. 16:23; Eze. 21:26-27; Rev. 4:8; Rev. 8:13 ☩ "In the cry of the four living creatures (?Holy, holy, holy,' Rev. 4:8) Hindson sees an indication of the Trinity (59) rather than an emphatic Semitic triplet. What kind of threefold existence would he find in triplets like 'a ruin, a ruin, a ruin' (Eze. 21:27) or 'land, land, land' (Jer. 22:29)?" William D. Barrick reviewing Edward Hindson, The Book of Revelation, Ref-0164, Vol. 13 No. 2, Fall 2002, p. 284.

Trinity - origin of term : ☩ "Smeaton states, 'Theophilus of Antioch about 175 A.D., speaks of a Triad in the Godhead.' To Tertullian (160-220) we are indebted for the first use of the word Trinity to describe the Godhead." Ref-0019, p. 239.

Trinity - Presbyterian redefinition : ☩ + ". . . the Presbyterian Church (USA) approved alternative designations for the person of the Trinity -- setting aside Father, Son, and Holy Spirit in favor of "Mother, Child, and Womb" or "Roch, Redeemer, and Friend." Ref-0789, p. 170.

Trinity - procession : ☩ + "The distinction between the members of the Trinity is in their personal mode of existence (tropos hyparxeos). The Father is not begotten, the Son is begotten, and the Holy Spirit proceeds but is not begotten." Ron J. Bigalke, The Doctrine of Double Predestination in Eastern and Western Thought, Ref-0785, Volume 14, Number 41, April, 2010, 21:44, p. 22. "In the Nicene Creed, the council articulated the homoousios clause which confessed that the Son is begotten eternally from the same being (substance) of the Father, and therefore is not a different kind of God. The Nicene-Constantinopolitan Creed (A.D. 381) applied the homoousios clause also to the Holy Spirit (sc. the being of the Holy Spirit is equally the same as the Father and the Son)." Ron J. Bigalke, The Doctrine of Double Predestination in Eastern and Western Thought, Ref-0785, Volume 14, Number 41, April, 2010, 21:44, p. 25.

Trinity - raised Christ : John 2:19; John 10:17-18; Acts 2:24; Acts 4:10; Rom. 4:24; Rom. 6:4; Rom. 8:11; 1Cor. 15:15; Heb. 13:20; 1Pe. 3:18 ☩ The resurrection is attributed to all three members of the Trinity as follows. To Jesus: John 2:19; 10:17. To the Father: Acts 4:10; 10:41; Rom. 4:24; 6:4; 8:11; 1Cor. 15:15; Heb. 13:20. To the Holy Spirit: 1Pe. 3:18.

Trinity - regenerate : John 5:21; Tit. 3:5; Jas. 1:17-18

Trinity - sanctifies : John 17:17; Rom. 15:16; 1Cor. 1:30; Eph. 5:25-27; 2Th. 2:13; Tit. 2:14; 1Pe. 1:2

Trinity - shema : echad - compound one☆

Trinity - subordination : John 14:16; John 14:26; John 15:26; John 16:7; John 16:13; 1Cor. 12:5-7; 1Cor. 15:27-28 ☩ See subordinate - Jesus to Father. "The function of one member of the Trinity may for a time be subordinate to one or both of the other members, but that does not mean he is in any way inferior in essence. Each of the three persons of the Trinity has had, for a period of time, a particular function unique to himself. This is to be understood as a temporary role for the purpose of accomplishing a given end, not a change in his status or essence. . . . The Son did not become less than the Father during his earthly incarnation, but he did subordinate himself functionally to the Father's will. Similarly, the Holy Spirit is now subordinated to the ministry of the Son (see John 14-16) as well as to the will of the Father, but this does not imply that he is less than they are." Ref-0139, 338.

Trinity - Westminster Confession : ☉ "In the unity of the Godhead there be three persons, of one substance, power, and eternity; God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. The Father is of none, neither begotten, nor proceeding; the Son is eternally begotten of the Father; the Holy Ghost eternally proceeding From the Father and the Son." Westminster Confession of Faith (Glasgow: Free Presbyterian, 1958), 27.

Judaism connected this last trump with the resurrection of the dead, and so does Paul. So, Paul's point here is that the Rapture will be the fulfillment of the Feast of Trumpets." Arnold G. truth - propositional - not relative : ☉ + "The objection comes often that rationality to the Western mind will not coincide with rationality in other parts of the world. If one honors that type of evasion, so many different definitions of rationality would emerge that the Bible would conflict with itself. The Bible itself builds on its own definition of rationality, and that is the rationality that has prevailed in countries where Christianity and the Bible have had a prolonged impact on the culture. The Bible is not an irrational book and must be interpreted according to rational principles. God is a rational being. The Holy Spirit who inspired biblical writers is rational, and His work must be treated in a rational light." Robert L. Thomas, The Nature of Truth: Postmodern or Propositional?, Ref-0164, Vol. 18 No. 1 Spring 2007, 3:21, p. 15.

truth - relative : ☉ + "...relativists and pluralists cannot logically label a view incompatible with their view as wrong; they can only logically say that the other view is different. Yet the minute they decide they are right and that those who believe in absolutes are wrong, they must logically conclude that *some absolute standard exists, even if they do not verbally admit it. . . . Think about it: why do relativists argue for the truth of their view? In other words, if there are no better views of reality and all views are just different views, why bother arguing for the truth of relativism -- unless, of course, relativists really believe that they have a better view of reality!" Ref-0122, p. 47. "A significant weakness of cognitive relativism is that it is incoherent and self-refuting. If, for example, I state, "All things are relative," I have just made a claim that is absolute. Thus, not everything is relative, because I am stating that the one statement above is absolutely true. But if all things are relative, then nothing can be absolutely true. Both statements cannot be true at the same time. The first statement, therefore, refutes itself and is inconsistent. . . . If relativists insist that tolerance manes that we should not evaluate truth claims as right or wrong, they have set forth an objective rule about tolerance, one that they believe should apply equally to all people without exception. But in saying this, they have identified an absolute truth, which cannot exist if all truth is relative to a group or an individual or a particular time period. Furthermore, as Koukl points out, "Relativists violate their own principle of tolerance when they do not tolerate the views of those whose morality [or truth claim] is nonrelativistic. They only tolerate those who hold their ethical viewpoint. They are, therefore, just as intolerant as any objectivist appears to be." Chuck Sutton, "The Challenge of Religious Pluralism", Ref-0229, pp. 120, 124. "Winnie the lovable bear has a notorious appetite, which brings him to the door of Rabbit for something to eat. When Winnie the Pooh knocks, Rabbit, who has no intention of feeding the bear, calls out, "Nobody home." Wise Winnie responds, "There must be somebody home or else he could not say, 'Nobody home.'" Winnie is right, of course. Rabbit cannot deny his own presence unless he is present to deny it. Similarly, those who deny the existence of absolutes cannot hold that all things are relative unless there is some unchangeable ground on which their affirmation can stand. It's senseless to pronounce everything relative while not allowing that very position to be relative as well. In reality, the relativist stands on the pinnacle of his or her own absolute in order to pronounce everything else relative." Tsitsith : Num. 15:38-41; Num. 16:1-2; Mtt. 14:36; Mtt. 23:5 ☉ Borders (corners, "wings") of the garment, or rather the fringes fastened to them. "The Tsitsith were originally directed to be of white threads, with one thread of deep blue in each fringe. According to the tradition, each of these white fringes is to consist of eight threads, one of them wound round the others: first, seven times with a double knot; then eight times with a double knot (7 + 8 numerically = 15); then eleven times with a double knot (11 numerically = י"א); and lastly thirteen times (13 numerically = י"ג; or together י"ג י"א, Jehovah One). Again, it is pointed out that as Tsitsith is numerically equal to 600 (ש"ס), this with the eight threads and five knots, gives the number 613, which is that of the Commandments. At present the Tsitsith are worn as a special undergarment. . . or on the Tallith or prayer mantle, but anciently they seem to have been worn on the outer garment itself." Ref-0021, footnote 5, p. 192. "According to Jewish thinking, God chose the Jewish people to be the source of light in the world. They were to study the rule of law given to them and obey it -- to take the 613 mitzvot (365 'thou shalt,' 248 'thou shalt not') and incorporate them into their daily lives." Ref-0057, July/August 2001, p. 26. For a complete list of the commandments, see <http://www.jewfaq.org/613.htm>. "The 613 commandments of the Mosaic Law cannot simply be divided into categories of commandments, laws, and statutes. The fact is that these Hebrew words are used interchangeably for all of them. They may have a slight shade of emphasis here and there but sometimes the same order could be called a commandment, a statute, a law, etc. There is really no clear way of defining which order falls into which category. There are basically 613 laws, 613 commandments, and 613 statutes." Ref-0067, Fall 2001. "Rabbi Simelai expounded, 'Six hundred and thirteen commandments were given to Moses, three hundred and sixty-five negative ones, corresponding to the number of the days of the solar year, and two hundred forty-eight positive commandments, corresponding to the parts of man's body. . . . David came and reduced them to eleven. . . (Ps. 15). Isaiah came and reduced them to six. . . (Isa. 33:25-26). Micah came and reduced them to three. . . (Mic. 6:8). Isaiah again came and reduced them to two. . . (Isa. 56:1). Amos came and reduced them to a single one, as it is said, For thus says the Lord to the house of Israel. Seek Me and live. Habakkuk further came and based them on one, as it is said, But the righteous shall live by his faith (Hab. 2:4).'" (Babylonian Talmud Makkot 24A-B) Ref-0137, pp. 107-108.

The Latin in the panel at the bottom has been translated thus: This picture represents, as far as art could, William Tyndale, sometime student of this Hall [Magdalen] and its ornament, who, after establishing here the happy beginnings of a purer theology, at Antwerp devoted his energies to translating into the vernacular the New Testament and the Pentateuch, a labour so greatly tending to the salvation of his fellow-countrymen that he was rightly called the Apostle of England. He gained a martyr's crown at Vilvoorde near Brussels in 1536, a man, if we may believe even his adversary (the Emperor's Procurator General), learned, pious, and good. The couplet set under Tyndale's hand has been translated: To scatter Roman darkness by this light The loss of land and life I'll reckon slight" Ref-0230, folio 3 (between pages 214 and 215).

Tyndale - terms from : ☆ + "Tyndale also introduced or revived many words that are still in use. He constructed the term "Jehovah" from the Hebrew construction known as the "tetragrammaton" in the Old Testament. He invented the English word "Passover" to refer to the Jewish festival known in Hebrew as Pesah. Other neologism developed by Tyndale to translate biblical words that had, up to that point, no real English equivalent include "scapegoat" and "atonement." It should be noted that this latter word was invented by tyndale to convey the idea of "reconciliation."

Tyndale - translation terms : ☆ + "Tyndale is not being perverse in translating the New Testament word for the Christian minister, presbuteros, as 'senior', reserving 'priest' for the occasional Greek iereus, the Jewish religious official. In Greek, a presbuteros is 'a more senior man' -- it is the comparative of the word for an old man. (In 1534, Tyndale changed his reading to 'elder'). The group of Christians together, called by the New Testament ekklesia, he calls, correctly; a 'congregation': the Greek word means 'an assembly', ultimately those called together by the town crier. Congregatio had been used by Erasmus in his parallel Latin translation for the Greek ekklesia wherever it occurred. Tyndale avoids 'church' because it is not what the New Testament says. The Greek verb metanoeo means, precisely, 'repent', that is turn the mind, and so Tyndale gives 'repent', and not 'do penance'. The Greek verb exomologeoo has a primary sense of 'acknowledge, admit', and 'acknowledge' is what Tyndale usually prints, rather than 'confess'. The Greek word agape is one of several words for 'love', so Tyndale prints 'love' (as in 1 Corinthians 13) and not 'charity'. In other words, he is making the New Testament refer inwardly to itself, as he instructs his readers to do, and not outwardly to the enormous secondary construction of late-mediaeval practices of the Church: priests and penance and confession and charity." Ref-0230, pp. 148-149.

After the time of Gentile blessing begins to wane, both are received finally by their brethren and recognized as a savior and deliverer (Gen. 45:1-15; Rom. 11:1-27). typology : Rom. 5:14; Heb. 7:3; Heb. 9:8-9; Heb. 11:19; 1Pe. 3:21 ☪ Type: "A figure or representation of something to come." Webster's New International Dictionary of the English Language, 2d ed. "It cannot be emphasized too strongly that types which do not have express scriptural authority are illustrative rather than proof of doctrinal points." Ref-0104, p. 63. "The matter of typology can be summarized as follows: (1) a type must have meaning in its own context; (2) the meaning of the type in its own context is essential for a type/antitype relationship (otherwise we have an example of a parable or perhaps an allegory, but not an example of typology); and (3) ignoring items 1 and 2 threatens the very integrity of the Old Testament." John S. Feinberg, "Salvation in the Old Testament," Ref-0198, p. 47.

typology - allegory not : ☪ + "typology is neither allegory nor symbolism. In either allegory or symbolism there is little import placed on the facticity of the symbol or allegory. Each item is a signpost to something more important. But typology is concerned with relationships between historical facts." John S. Feinberg, "Systems of Discontinuity," Ref-0199, p. 78.

Typology - Biblical Principles - 00017.doc : 00017.doc☆ typology - definition : ☪ "A type is an Old Testament institution, event, person, object, or ceremony which has reality and purpose in Biblical history, but which also by divine design foreshadows something yet to be revealed." Donald K. Campbell, "The Interpretation of Types", Bibliotheca Sacra, CXII, No. 447 (July, 1955), 250, cited by Ref-0207, p. 167.

typology - dispensational interpretation : ☪ + "Nondispensational systems stress that the type is the shadow and the antitype is reality; therefore, the meaning of the antitype supersedes and cancels the meaning of the type in its own context. Dispensationalists do not think types necessarily are shadows, and they demand that both type and antitype be given their due meanings in their own contexts while maintaining a typological relation to one another." John S. Feinberg, "Systems of Discontinuity," Ref-0199, p. 78.

typology - doctrine not taught : 2Cor. 4:6; 1Pe. 3:21 ☪ "Do not teach doctrines by types. -- It is legitimate for interpreters to illustrate doctrines by the use of types. Peter used the Noahic Flood to illustrate baptism (1Pe. 3:21) and Paul used the primeval creation of light to illustrate God's work of light in the heart (2Cor. 4:6). Modern interpreters may also do this. However, it is never right for modern interpreters to teach doctrines by types. Of course, the writer of Hebrews did use types to teach and prove doctrine, but Bible writers wrote under divine inspiration. We do not." Ref-0207, p. 172.

typology - extreme : Heb. 7:3

typology - Holy Spirit author of : Heb. 9:8

typology - NT vs. OT : ☪ + "if the NT antitype cancels the meaning of the OT type, the NT must tell us so. NT reinterpretations of OT passages are neither explicit nor implicit cancellations of the meaning of the OT. Likewise, NT antitypes neither explicitly nor implicitly cancel the meaning of OT types. Thinking they do misunderstands typology." John S. Feinberg, "Systems of Discontinuity," Ref-0199, p. 79.

"The charter granted to Rhode Island, in 1663, naming the petitioners, speaks of them as "pursuing, with peaceable and loyal minds, their sober, serious and religious intentions, of godly edifying themselves and one another in the holy Christian faith and worship as they were persuaded; together with the gaining over and conversion of the poor, ignorant Indian natives, in these parts of America, to the sincere profession and obedience of the same faith and worship." Ref-1275, [par. 74]. "In the charter of privileges granted, in 1701, by William Penn to the province of Pennsylvania and territories thereunto belonging (such territories afterwards constituting the State of Delaware), it is recited : "Because no people can be truly happy, though under the greatest enjoyment of civil liberties, if abridged of the freedom of their consciences as to their religious profession and worship; and Almighty God being the only Lord of Conscience, Father of Lights and Spirits, and the author as well as object of all divine knowledge, faith and worship, who only doth enlighten the minds and persuade and convince the understandings of the people, I do hereby grant and declare." Ref-1275, [par. 88]. "The charter of Massachusetts Bay, granted in 1629 by Charles I, after several provisions, recites: "Whereby our said people, inhabitants there, may be so religiously, peaceably and civilly governed as their good life and orderly conversation may win and incite the natives of the country to their knowledge and obedience of" Ref-1275, [par. 51]. "In the Constitution of South Carolina, of 1778, it was declared that "the Christian Protestant religion shall be deemed and is hereby constituted and declared to be the established religion of this State." Ref-1275, [par. 97]. "It is not exaggeration to say that Christianity in some of its creeds was the principal cause of the settlement of many of the colonies, and cooperated with business hopes and purposes in the settlement of the others. Beginning in this way and under these influences it is not strange that the colonial life had an emphatic Christian tone." Ref-1275, [par. 107]. "In the frame of government for Pennsylvania, prepared by William Penn, in 1683, it was provided that "all treasurers, judges . . . and other officers . . . and all members elected to serve in provincial council and general assembly, and all that have right to elect such members, shall be such as profess faith in Jesus Christ." And in the charter of privileges for that colony, given in 1701 by William Penn and approved by the colonial assembly it was provided "that all persons who also profess to believe in Jesus Christ, the Savior of the World, shall be capable ... to serve this government in any capacity, both legislatively and executively." Ref-1275, [par. 140]. "In Delaware, by the Constitution of 1776, every officeholder was required to make and subscribe the following declaration: "I, A. B., do profess faith in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ His Only Son, and in the Holy Ghost, one God, blessed forevermore; and I do acknowledge the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be given by divine inspiration." Ref-1275, [par. 145-146]. "New Hampshire, in the Constitutions of 1784 and 1792, required that senators and representatives should be of the "Protestant, religion," and (this provision remained in force until 1877." Ref-1275, [par. 148]. "The Constitution of North Carolina, of 1776, provided: "That no person who shall deny the being of God or the truth of the Protestant religion, or the divine authority either of the Old or New Testaments, or who shall hold religious principles incompatible with the freedom and safety of the State, shall be capable of holding any office or place of trust or profit in the civil department within this State." And this remained in force until 1835, when it was amended by changing the word "Protestant" to "Christian," and as so amended remained in force until the Constitution of 1868. And in that Constitution among the persons disqualified for office were "all persons who shall deny the being of Almighty God." Ref-1275, [par. 153]. "New Jersey, by the Constitution of 1776, declared "that no Protestant inhabitant of this colony shall be denied the enjoyment of any civil right merely on account of his religious principles, but that all persons professing a belief in the faith of any Protestant sect, who shall demean themselves peaceably under the government as hereby established, shall be capable of being elected into any office of profit or trust, or being a member of either branch of the legislature." Ref-1275, [par. 159-163]. "The Constitution of South Carolina, of 1776, provided that no person should be eligible to the Senate or House of Representatives "unless he be of the Protestant religion." Ref-1275, [par. 163]. "Massachusetts, in its Constitution of 1780, required from governor, lieutenant-governor, councilor, senator and representative before proceeding to execute the duties of his place or office a declaration that "I believe the Christian religion, and have a firm persuasion of its truth." Ref-1275, [par. 166]. "The Vermont Constitution of 1777 required of every member of the House of Representatives that he take this oath: "I do believe in one God, the creator and governor of the universe, the rewarder of the good and punisher of the wicked, and I do acknowledge the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be given by divine inspiration, and own and profess the Protestant religion." A similar requirement was provided by the Constitution of 1786." Ref-1275, [par. 171]. "In Maryland, by the Constitution of 1776, every person appointed to any office of profit or trust was not only to take an official oath of allegiance to the State, but also to "subscribe a declaration of his belief in the Christian religion." In the same State, in the Constitution of 1851, it was declared that no other test or qualification for admission to any office of trust or profit shall be required than the official oath "and a declaration of belief in the Christian religion; and if the party shall profess to be a Jew the declaration shall be of his belief in a future state of rewards and punishments." As late as 1864 the same State in its Constitution had a similar provision, Mississippi, by the Constitution of 1817, provided that "no person who denies the being of God or a future state of rewards and punishments shall hold any office in the civil department of the State." Ref-1275, [par. 175-182]. "By express command of Congress studies are not pursued at the military or naval academies and distilleries are prohibited from operation on Sundays, while chaplains are required to hold religious services once at least on that day." Ref-1275, [par. 207]. "The New York Supreme Court, in Lindemuller vs. The People, 33 Barbour, 561, held that: "Christianity is not the legal religion of the State, as established by law. If it were, it would be a civil or political institution, which it is not; but this is not inconsistent with the idea that it is in fact, and ever has been, the religion of the people. This fact is everywhere prominent in all our civil and political history>and has been, from the first, recognized and acted upon by the people, as well as by constitutional conventions, by legislatures and by courts of justice." Ref-1275, [par. 254]. "The Pennsylvania Supreme Court, in Updegraph vs. The Commonwealth, n Sergeant and Rawle, 400, made this declaration: "Christianity, general Christianity, is, and always has been, a part of the common law of Pennsylvania; Christianity, without the spiritual artillery of European countries; for this Christianity was one of the considerations of the royal charter, and the very basis of its great founder, William Penn; not Christianity founded on any particular religious tenets; not Christianity with an established church, and tithes, and spiritual courts; but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men." Ref-1275, [par. 272]. "Think of the vast number of academies, colleges and universities scattered through the land. Some of them, it is true, are under secular control, but there is yet to be established in this country one of those institutions founded on the religions of Confucius, Buddha or Mohammed, while an overwhelming majority are under the special direction and control of Christian teachers." Ref-1275, [par. 298]. "Notice also the avowed and pronounced Christian forces of the country, and here I must refer to the census of 1890, for the statistics of the census of 1900 in these matters have not been compiled: The population was 62,622,000. There were 165,000 Christian church organizations, owning 142,000 buildings, in which were sittings for 40,625,000 people. The communicants in these churches numbered 20,476,000, and the value of the church property amounted to $669,876,000. In other words, about one third of the entire population were directly connected with Christian organizations. Nearly two-thirds would find seats in our churches. If to the members we add the children and others in their families more or less connected with them, it is obvious that a large majority were attached to the various church organizations. I am aware that the relationship between many members and their churches is formal, and that church relations do not constitute active and paramount forces in their lives, and yet it is clear that there is an identification of the great mass of American citizens with the Christian church." Ref-1275, [par. 301]. "You will have noticed that I have presented no doubtful facts. Nothing has been stated which is debatable. The quotations from charters are in the archives of the several States; the laws are on the statute books; judicial opinions are taken from the official reports; 'statistics from the census publications. In short, no evidence has been presented which is open to question." Ref-1275, [par. 320]. "I have said enough to show that Christianity came to this country with the first colonists; has been powerfully identified with its rapid development, colonial and national, and to-day exists as a mighty factor in the life of the republic." Ref-1275, [par. 334]. "I CONSIDERED last night the proposition that the United States of America is a Christian nation. I pointed out that Christianity was a primary cause of the first settlement on our shores; that the organic instruments, charters and constitutions of the colonies were filled with abundant recognitions of it as a controlling factor in the life of the people; that in one at least of them it was in terms declared the established religion, while in several the furthering of Christianity was stated to be one of the purposes of the government; in many faith in it was a condition of holding office; in some, authority was given to the legislature to make its support a public charge; in nearly all the constitutions there has been an express recognition of the sanctity of the Christian Sunday; the God of the Bible is appealed to again and again. Sunday laws have been enacted and enforced in most of the colonies and States. About one-third of the population are avowedly Christian and communicants in some Christian organization; there are sitting accommodations in the churches for nearly two-thirds; educational institutions are largely under the control of Christian denominations, and even in those which, in obedience to the rule of separation between church and state, are secular in their organization, the principles of Christianity are uniformly recognized. By these and other evidences I claim to have shown that the calling of this republic a Christian nation is not a mere pretense but recognition of an historical, legal and social truth." Ref-1275, [par. 353-362]. "let it be noticed that there is no incompatibility between Christianity and patriotism. The declaration of the Master, "Render therefore unto Caesar, the things which are Caesar's; and unto God, the things that are God's," is not a declaration of antagonism between the two, but an affirmation of duty to each." Ref-1275, [par. 366]. "Christianity has entered into and become part of the life of this republic; it came with its beginnings and prompted them; has been identified with its toils and trials, shared in its victories, cheered in the hour of darkness and gloom, and stands to-day prophetic of untold blessings in the future. And shall it be said that it alone of all our benedictions has forfeited a claim to receive from every American citizen the tribute of respect?" Ref-1275, [par. 434].

universities - Harvard, Yale, and Princeton :
 ☉ + "Our three American universities of greatest historical importance, Harvard, Yale, and Princeton, were originally founded by Calvinists, as strong Calvinistic schools, designed to give students a sound basis in theology as well as in other branches of learning. Harvard, established in 1636, was intended primarily to be a training school for ministers, and more than half of its first graduating classes went into the ministry. Yale, sometimes referred to as 'the mother of Colleges,' was for a considerable period a rigid Puritan institution. "Upon completion of the laurel ritual, the Pythia would drink deeply from the water of the Castilian Fountain, burn laurel and barley on the unending fire of the altar to Apollo and finally take her seat upon the Tripod in preparation for what was to come. Instantly the Pythia would enter in a manonion (mania), which was characterized by frantic and uncontrolled bodily movements and speaking in unknown tongues. As the Pythia went into here ecstatic and maniacal trance, a prophate (male prophet) would interpret and write down the oracle or prophecy of the Pythia. The wild and ecstatic manner in which these Pythia would receive the oracle did not always end well. Plutarch notes, one one occasion she died as a result of the violent agitation caused by the prophetic furor, due to the fact that the Pythia had entered the tripod against here will and was possessed by an "incoherent and evil inspiration" (Dempsey 1972: 68; Plutarch, Obsolescence of Oracles 438; LCL 5: 499)." Velikovsky - unreliable : ☹ + "Velikovsky's 'revised chronology' has been rejected by nearly all mainstream historians and Egyptologists. As this article has sought to show, this cannot be lightly brushed aside as simply due to establishment bias or anti-biblical agendas. Focusing on only one of the main pillars of the chronology at this stage, it is clear that Velikovsky's use of proof material was, to put it mildly, very selective and erroneous. This is not surprising to those who have carefully studied the issues--as the eminent Abraham Sachs stated: "Wherever one turns in Dr. Velikovsky's works, one finds a wasteland strewn with uncritically accepted evidence that turns to dust at the slightest probe." . . . Further volumes of Ages in Chaos appeared in 1978. That year, a conference of scholars was held in Glasgow, Scotland, under the auspices of the Society for Interdisciplinary Studies, to review the whole matter of the ANE chronology in the light of the controversy surrounding Velikovsky's ideas. These scholars were in the main sympathetic to a need for revision. . . . The final conclusion on Velikovsky's work: that his revised chronology was simply untenable." versification : ☹ First English Bible with versification was Whittingham's New Testament in 1557 which printer Robert Estienne had hastily marked up for one of his editions of the Greek Testament while traveling between Paris and Lyons in 1551. Some of the divisions are questionable: "I think it had been better done on his knees in a closet," said one Bible historian. Ref-0020, p. 154. "Verse divisions were added to the New Testament, for example, in 1551." Ref-0014, Introductory Notes to NT. "Each book was separate, and there were no vowel points until the Masoretes added them (fifth to tenth century A.D.). After the Babylonian captivity, for the purpose of public reading and interpretation, space stops were employed, and still later additional markings were added. These 'verse' markings were not regulated, and differed from place to place. It was not until about A.D. 900 that the markings were standardized." Ref-0075, p. 339.

a Christian? This is not a hard question to answer. It is conceivable that someone might come to Christ and trust Christ as Savior without yet learning that the Bible teaches that Jesus was born of a virgin. A new believer is not yet aware of the full structure of Christian truth. The real question is this: Can a Christian, once aware of the Bible's teaching, reject the Virgin Birth? The answer must be no." Albert Mohler, Must We Believe the Virgin Birth?, Wednesday, December 22, 2010. Vulgate - grace - Mary as source : Luke 1:28
☪ "The Vulgate translation of the opening section of this account reads like this (Luke 1:28). And the angel went in, and said to her: "Hail, O one that is full of grace! The Lord is with you! Blessed are you among women!" Erasmus was scathing about this translation. The words of the angel could not possibly be translated as "Hail, O one that is full of grace!" Perhaps it could be rendered as "Hail, O one that has found grace!" or "Hail, O favored one!" The implication of the passage was that Mary had found God's favor -- not that she could bestow that favor on others. The angelic words we have just noted (in Latin: ave gratia plena!) were often interpreted in the Middle Ages as meaning that Mary was like a reservoir, full of God's grace. She could, therefore, be a source of God's grace to those who needed it, and who could access this grace through prayer to her." Ref-0686, p. 58.

Vulgate - importance : ☪ + "The Vulgate now numbers 10,000 or more manuscripts. It has been copied more than any other book in the Christian era. Historically speaking, it ranks next to the Septuagint as the most important translation ever made. . . . The Vulgate was the first book of importance to be printed. About 1450 Johann Gutenberg of Mainz, Germany, perfected the use of movable type. In 1456 the "Gutenberg Bible" was issued. It was a beautiful Latin Bible, whose appearance marked a new epoch." Vulgate - penance - Mtt. 3:1-2 : Mtt. 3:1-2 ☪
"The Vulgate offers the following account of the ministry of John [the Baptist] (Matthew 3:1-2): In those days, John the Baptist came, preaching in the wilderness of Judaea, and saying: "Do penance, for the kingdom of heaven is close to hand." Few of the late medieval readers of this text could miss the implications of what was being said, given the highly developed theory and practice of penance of the era. John seemed to be demanding that they "do penance" -- that is to say, to find a priest, confess their sins, and carry out any acts of penance this priest might require of them. The Vulgate version of the passage suggested that John's words were firmly connected to the penitential system of the Church, so that this network of penance was sanctioned by Holy Writ." Ref-0686, p. 57.

I propose this could mean placing a shell of water in the outer regions of the solar system, to protect the earth and later its inhabitants. Because there was much more water in the original sphere than there is today on Earth, much of it may be found in outer solar system objects. On Day 4, some of this was formed into the gas giants (planets) and Trans-Neptunian objects (sometimes called 'Kuiper Belt Objects', which is a less objective name). Much remains today as icy comets. A lot of 'water' is still out there in a halo around the solar system. Also, a lot of evidence is coming in that the objects (planetoids, comets, etc.) beyond Neptune are largely water ice. This 'water' may also serve to rain down in God's judgment on the ungodly in the Day of our Lord." Ref-0813, p. 94. "However, by putting the "waters above" at the perimeter of the solar system, they continue to have a possible role in affairs on earth. They could, for example, have supplied impacting objects to precipitate the Flood, and they could have supplied comets to the solar system. They could also have provided objects such as the "stars falling from the sky" and the "something like a great mountain, burning with fire was thrown into the sea" of Revelation 8:8, associated with the end-time judgement. Scripturally, this seems attractive, because the "waters above" are given considerable prominence in the Genesis cosmogony, which suggests they were to have an important role to play." Ref-0814, pp. 180-181. ". . . my end note . . . suggests the 'waters which are above the expanse' (Genesis 1:7) are not a solid shell of ice but rather (by now) a thin shell-like region consisting of a tenuous cloud of ice particles. Their total mass is great simply because they cover such a large area. . . . I chose the 'shell' model as an example because Psalm 148:3, 4 (NAS) implies that waters presently exist beyond the highest galaxies: . . ." wedding - Jewish : Rev. 19:7 ❖ "Jewish marriage included a number of steps: first, betrothal (which involved the prospective groom's traveling from his father's house to the home of the prospective bride, paying the purchase price, and thus establishing the marriage covenant); second, the groom's returning to his father's house (which meant remaining separate from his bride for 12 months, during which time he prepared the living accommodations for his wife in his father's house); third, the groom's coming for his bride at a time not known exactly to her; fourth, his return with her to the groom's father's house to consummate the marriage and to celebrate the wedding feast for the next seven days (during which the bride remained closeted in her bridal chamber)." Ref-0079, p. 67. "First, the father of the groom made the arrangements for the marriage and paid the bride price [Acts 20:28; Eph. 5:25-27]. The timing of the arrangement varied. Sometimes it occurred when both children were small, and at other times it was a year before the marriage itself. Often the bride and groom did not even meet until their wedding day. The second step, which occurred a year or more after the first step, was the fetching of the bride. The bridegroom would go to the home of the bride in order to bring her to his home [John 14:3; 1Th. 4:13-18]. In connection with this step, two other things should be noted. First, it was the father of the groom who determined the timing [Mtt. 24:36]. Second, prior to the groom's leaving to fetch the bride, he must already have a place prepared for her as their abode [John 14:2]. This was followed by the third step, the wedding ceremony, to which a few would be invited [Rev. 19:7]. Prior to the wedding ceremony, the bride underwent a ritual immersion for ritual cleansing [1Cor. 3:12-15; Rev. 19:7-8]. The fourth step, the marriage feast, would follow and could last for as many as seven days. Many more people would be invited to the feast than were to the marriage ceremony [Mtt. 22:1-14; 25:1-13]. In the Marriage of the Lamb all four of these steps of the Jewish wedding ceremony are evident." pp. 162-163. See Ref-0220,

"the Hebrew word shabuwa is found only in one other passage of the book (Dan. 10:2-3), where the prophet states that he mourned and fasted 'three full weeks.' Now here it is perfectly obvious that the context demands 'weeks' of days. . . And significantly, the Hebrew here reads literally 'three sevens of days.' Now if in the ninth chapter, the writer intended us to understand that the 'seventy sevens' are composed of days, why did he not use the same form of expression adopted in chapter ten?" Ref-0050, p. 243 quoting McClain. "There are four good reasons for believing that the "seven" intended here is a period of seven years: (1) Daniel has just been concerned about years (vv. Dan. 9:1-2). (2) It is impossible to fit the events of verses 24-27 into 490 days or weeks. (3) In the only other place where Daniel uses the word week, he qualifies it by adding the word days (Dan. 10:2-3). (4) Finally, the fact that verse 27 speaks of a covenant being broken at the half-way point of the seventieth seven agrees well with Daniel 7:25, 12:7, and Revelation 12:14, which speak of three-and-one-half years as one-half of a week." "Another example of the third seal judgment, albeit on a smaller scale, is recorded in 1S. 12:17-19 . . . People do not die from thunder and rain! However, as Nogah Nareuveni (1988:25) has pointed out: 'The ripe, heavy-eared wheat can suffer from a downpour not only through physical damage from the force of the wind-driven rain, but also by rotting from the sudden moisture combined with the high temperature that prevail in Israel by Shavuot (in late May-early June). This is why the Israelites cried out to Samuel to 'pray. . . to save us from death' (1S. 12:19)-from death by starvation that would follow the destruction of the grain crop.' . . . Demand for wheat and the shortage of supply will lead to higher prices for both wheat and barley. Olive trees and grapevines ('oil and wine') are not affected by this rainstorm, because they will have already been pollinated. In fact, the rain might even help them, giving oil and wine for all -- rich and poor alike. This is an 'obvious' interpretation from the agriculture cycle and weather patterns of Scripture." Ref-0066, vol. 13, no. 1, Winter 2000, 11.

It was the tomb of George Whitefield, who had died in Newburyport only five years earlier. Together the minister and officers pried open the coffin and removed the clerical collar and wrist bands from the revivalist's skeleton. Somehow it was thought that the spirit of America's greatest preacher of spiritual freedom would assist them in this struggle for political freedom. "Why does the universe look so old? First, the most natural understanding from Scripture on the age of the universe is this: The universe looks old because the Creator made it whole. When He made Adam, Adam was not a fetus; Adam was a man. He had the appearance of a man, which by our understanding would have required time for Adam to get old. But not by the sovereign creative power of God. He put Adam in the garden. The garden was not merely seeds; it was a fertile, fecund, mature garden. The Genesis account clearly claims that God creates and makes things whole." R. Albert Mohler, Jr., Why Does the Universe Look So Old?, [http://www.icr.org/article/5669/] accessed 20101017. "I will define 'mature creation' in the following way. The earth, solar system, Milky Way Galaxy and entire universe were brought into existence supernaturally during six 24-hour days. Top soil and trees appeared virtually instantaneously in the Garden. Fully-grown animals were miraculously formed on land and in the air, complete with symbiotic relationships. The seas instantly swarmed with creatures, great and small, that had never been born or developed from infancy. Our first parents, Adam and Eve, were adults from their first breaths. The sun's nuclear fusion furnace began on Day 4, at full power and in thermodynamic equilibrium. Starlight from distant stars was created in transit, complete with a virtual history of information embedded within the light waves. Adam and Eve could look at the night sky their first evening on earth and see cosmic light sources much as we do tonight. To an observer, the completed creation on Day 6 was fully functioning and in steady state. . . . The mature creation definition does not include such present realities as thorns, thistles, disease and death. These profound defects follow from the post-creation Fall or Curse as described in Genesis 3. Likewise, the mature creation description does not include the idea that fossils were created ex nihilo in Earth rocks. Such evidences of judgment and death find their source in the Genesis Flood which took place about 1600 years following creation." Ref-0784, Don B. DeYoung, Mature creation and seeing distant starlight, 24(3), 54:59, p. 54. "As a point of interest, the question of Adam's navel has also impacted the art world. Raphael (1483-1520) included navels for Adam and Eve in his ceiling fresco at the Vatican. Michelangelo (1475-1564) likewise included a navel for Adam on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel. . . . In contrast, Dutch artist Jan van Scorel (1495-1512) painted smooth, featureless stomachs in his Adam and Eve in Paradise. One can imagine the artistic debates over this issue at the time of the paintings, a debate still unresolved." Ref-0784, Don B. DeYoung, Mature creation and seeing distant starlight, 24(3), 54:59, p. 56. "The spectra of distant stars do indeed contain detailed information. Furthermore, every single component of any conceivable supernatural creation faces this 'problem'. Consider a pebble lying upon the ground in the Garden of Eden. Today, rocks come from previously existing materials. If the just-created pebble in the Garden is a smooth stone, it bears an apparent record of chemical weathering or tumbling in water. If it appears rough or broken, it then bears an apparent record of fracturing by previous mechanical weathering. The reader is challenged to describe any detail of the Creation Week, large or small, which would not carry such a historic record. . . . Likewise, did trees in the Garden have rings and knots? . . . If creation with maturity is deceptive, whether for rocks, atmosphere, stars, or our first parents, then so are all biblical miracles. . . . Consider the New Testament miracle of wine-making, found in John 2:1-11. If a chemist could go back in time, could he or she perhaps measure the molecular components that had never actually been converted from sugars? Perhaps the wine could be identified as the product of a particular local vineyard, even though it had never been pressed from harvested grapes. The point here is that created wine contains detailed chemical information, just as starlight contain spectral details. Mature creation is deceptive only when one assumes outright that apparent age is false. The Genesis account of God's supernatural creative activities in six literal days, complete with visible starlight, is fully consistent with a mature creation." Ref-0784, Don B. DeYoung, Mature creation and seeing distant starlight, 24(3), 54:59, p. 57. [Furthermore, the apparent age of creation can hardly be deemed 'deceptive' by God when He clearly revealed otherwise in Genesis -- which at one time was universal knowledge. Those who ignore God's self-revelation in the Scriptures and then accuse Him of being deceptive in a mature creation have only themselves to blame.] "I will conclude with five brief points in favor of a mature creation model. First, a mature creation takes a straightforward, transparent literal approach to the Genesis creation account. Genesis 1 and 2, after all, give us literal narrative history. Second, in explaining the observation of distant starlight, the mature creation view does not require the employment of abstract physics concepts including general relativity, cosmology and gravity theory. Such disciplines are incomplete and may be modified in the future. Third, consider the alternative to created starlight. We are then led to use our present understanding of natural science to explain details of the supernatural Creation. Is this logical or consistent? Were the laws of nature including relativity and conservation of energy even in operation during the Creation Week? Fourth, those who favor a mature creation are in good company. It is a historically-rich position as demonstrated by many Bible scholars, past and present. Fifth, the mature creation is consistent and compatible with the nature of miracles from the Old and New Testaments." First, God created Adam before he created Eve (Gen. 2:7,18-23). The role of first-born typically connotes a position of leadership throughout the Old Testament (Gen. 25:27-34; 35:23; 38:27-30; 49:3-4; Deu. 21:15-17; 1Chr. 5:1-2; see also 1Ti. 2:13). Second, although Eve sinned first (Gen. 3:6) God spoke to Adam first (Gen. 3:9) implying accountability (Rom. 5:12) and thus male headship. Third, Adam named Eve (Gen. 2:23) implying his authority over her just as God's naming of creation (Gen. 1:10) also implies his authority over it." Andy Woods, Ref-1217, pp. 42-43.

"The first thing you need to understand is that the bible used the terminology "will of God" to express two different concepts. One is commonly called the sovereign will of God (also known as the "secret" or "decretive" will). The other is called the moral will (also known as the "revealed" or "preceptive" will). . . . The sovereign will of God is his pre-ordained purpose -- whatever he has planned to occur in the universe and in our lives. It is called "secret" because we do not and cannot know anything he has planned before it actually happens (with the exception of prophecies of future events). And the term "decretive" is an old one that comes from the idea of God's "decree," summarized well by the Westminster Confession of Faith, written in 1648: God from all eternity, did, by the most wise and holy counsel of His own will, freely, and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass: yet so, as thereby neither is God the author of sin, nor is violance offered to the will of the creatures. (III, 1)." will - perfect? : Rom. 12:2 ☩ “We should simply accept God’s sovereign will and choose according to his moral will, but many Christians have hopelessly muddled their decision-making process by inventing another meaning for the “will of God,” and making that wrong concept the basis for their decisions. . . . Many Christians think that “God has a unique individual plan for my life, which includes every specific detail.” So far so good, but then they say, “I’ve got to find out what that will is and decide to do it, or else I will be out of God’s will.” . . . [T]hey are not thinking of the sovereign will of God or the moral will of God, but a third concept different from both of them. It has sometimes been called “the individual will of God,” “the perfect will of God,” or “the center of God’s will.” . . . God does have a unique and specific plan for every life, . . . but that is his sovereign will, which is “secret” and cannot be known ahead of time for the purposes of guidance. And the moral will, which is provided for our guidance, contains general commands and principles rather than specific, personal details. This third idea, of an “individual will” different from the sovereign will and more specific than the moral will, is not a biblical concept.” Ref-0237, pp. 54-55. “Any good father who wants to train his children, as well as protect them, will relate to them in this way. He will not make every choice for them, nor will he tell them exactly what to do in every situation. Rather he will provide for them general guidelines for their protection, and then teach them principles by which they can learn to make choices within those guidelines. . . . the Bible teaches that whatever choice we make, as long as there is nothing unscriptural about it, will be pleasing to God and a part of his plan for our lives.” Ref-0237, pp. 144, 148.

Within inflationary cosmology, it is theoretically possible for a fully functioning human brain to pop spontaneously into existence, due to thermal fluctuations in the quantum vacuum, and then disappear again. Such an entity has been called a “Boltzmann brain.” Under standard conditions for bubble-universe generation in inflationary cosmology, Boltzmann brains would be expected to arise as often, or more often, than normal occurrences in our universe. Indeed, calculations based upon some inflationary cosmological models lead to a situation in which these free-floating Boltzmann brains infinitely outnumber normal brains in people like us.” Ref-1219, par. 8511.

witnessing - tips - CLA : ☪ + "Please remember that when doing public witnessing, it is always helpful to follow simple rules of etiquette, being careful to remember that you represent Christ and His Word. 1. Do not disrupt the traffic flow. Stand near a building or other stationary object such as a lamp post. 2. Do not interfere with ingress or egress to buildings. 3. Maintain a reasonable noise level for the situation. 4. Do not use words that would provoke a riot or other "clear and present danger" to public safety. 5. If hassled by police or other citizens, be polite, explain your rights, but consider moving to another location rather than cause a confrontation. 6. Consider picking up any Gospel tracts passersby drop near you in the street. This practice may also save you money since you may be able to reuse some of the tracts. 7. Don't force people to take your literature if they obviously do not want it. 8. If you engage someone in conversation about the Gospel, move to the side of the street in order not to block traffic. 9. If you might gather a crowd by engaging in preaching, drama, or singing, check your location ahead of time to make sure that a crowd will not block traffic flow or interfere with ingress and egress to buildings. 10. Work in teams as much as possible to ensure safety and to vouch for each other if confronted by police. This is particularly important in "bad" parts of town. 11. If you see a companion being arrested, do not interfere with the arrest. Observe from the sidelines and then call a local attorney or pastor for help. 12. Do not resist if arrested yourself. 13. If you are confronted or harassed by police, seek an appointment with a high city authority such as the police chief, mayor, or city manager. 14. Choose a time and place for street preaching which will not interfere with neighboring businesses or with the peace and quiet of a residential neighborhood." Christian Law Association, "Witnessing in America", The Legal Alert, April 2009, p. 4. [<http://www.christianlaw.org/Articles/April-2009.html>] accessed 20090421.

Ref-0005, p. 274. "The king will also favor neither normal human marital relations ("the desire of women") nor any god, because he will make himself greater than all (Dan. 11:37) rendering him incapable of the loving devotion that is required by both marriage and true piety.[^ 14] Some, however, says that this phrase refers to the Messiah as One whom women desire to bear. To support this theory it is noted that in the other occurrences of the construct noun תַּבְּרָה the following genitive is always subjective ("desired by") not objective ("desire for"), and that it is used in what may be a messianic designation in Haggai 2:7 ("the desire of the nations"). However, there are only three other uses of the construct noun (1S. 9:20; 2Chr. 36:10; Hag. 2:7), which is hardly enough to establish any pattern of usage, and there are many examples of construct nouns that are followed by both subjective and objective genitives. [14] Luther suggested that "the desire of women" is a reference to marital love ("Preface to Daniel," 313). He is followed in this by Archer, "Daniel"; Calvin, A Commentary on Daniel, 2:345-46; Keil, Biblical Commentary on the Book of Daniel, 464-65; Leupold, Exposition of Daniel, 515-16; and Young, The Prophecy of Daniel: A Commentary, 249." Ref-0086, p. 6. "It should be pointed out that providential preservation is not a necessary consequence of inspiration. Preservation of the Word of God is promised in Scripture, and inspiration and preservation are related doctrines, but they are distinct from each other, and there is a danger in making one the necessary corollary of the other. The Scriptures do not do this. God, having given the perfect revelation by verbal inspiration, was under no special or logical obligation to see that man did not corrupt it. He created the first man perfect, but He was under no obligation to keep him perfect. Or to use another illustration, having created all things perfect, God was not obligated to see that the pristine perfection of the word was maintained. In His providence the word was allowed to suffer the Fall and to endure a defacement of its original condition. It may very well be that the Scriptures used to attest the promise to preserve God's Word do involve preservation. The point is that this is a different matter than insisting that God, because He inspired the Scriptures, is ipso facto obligated to preserve them; or, further, that He is obligated to preserve them in a particular way. One danger of such a position is that the faith of some has been weakened when they have become aware of variant readings in the manuscripts precisely because they have confounded preservation with inspiration. Though both are biblical doctrines, the Scripture does not link them inexorably." Ref-0787, p. 38.

"Smith has remarked that Obadiah 'has been tossed out of one century into another by successive critics, till there exists in their estimates of its date a difference of nearly 600 years' (899 to soon after 312 B.C.). The main two criteria for dating the book are the devastation of Jerusalem [Oba. 1:10-14] and Obadiah's relationship to Jeremiah 49. - X0073 - crowns : Ps. 110:4; Zec. 6:11 ☼ + “an elaborate crown” = crowns, plural “Rabbi Akiba made the connection between Daniel 7 and Psalm 110. When explaining the plural “thrones” used in Dan 7:9, he said, “One [throne] was for Himself and one for David,” that is, for the Messiah. As Hay points out, “It seems distinctly possible that both Akiva and the writer of Daniel 7 were thinking of Ps. 110:1.” Yet a second important intertextual reference to Ps. 110:4 is Zech 6:9-15. There it describes the eschatological unification of the royal and priestly offices with a role play by Joshua the high priest. A composite crown, representing kingship and priesthood, is placed on Joshua’s head, and he is called by the messianic title, “Branch” (6:12). The Priest-King will build the eschatological Temple and sit and rule on His throne . . . He will be a priest on His throne, and the counsel of peace will be between the two offices” (Zech 6:12-13 NASB). Clearly this is a reference to the King described in Ps 110:4, who is a priest like Melchizedek, uniting the offices of king and priest.” Ref-1272, p. 182.

- X0093 - redeemed us : Rev. 5:9 ☼ + “redeemed us” = only Codex Alexandrinus (A) omits “us”. In Codex Alexandrinus, the “us” falls after the bottom of the left-hand column and before the top of the right-hand column on a page. Based on the change in text darkness, it appears the scribe dipped his pen between the end of the first column and the beginning of the next -- possibly also having taken a break from writing. This is evident from Hoskier. When considering Rev. 5:9-10 there are three primary variations: (1) NU prefers <blank>, “them,” and “them.” (2) TR prefers “us,” “us,” and “we.” (3) Greek manuscript evidence suggests an antiphonal singing arrangement using “us,” “them,” and “they.”

"Let My refugees live among you, O Moab; be a shelter for them from the pillager. . ." Rev-0196; "Let Moab's outcasts find asylum in you. . ." Ref-0410. The LXX identifies the refugees as Moabites whereas the Masoretic Text and Vulgate identify Moab as providing asylum for the refugees. The difference is due to different vowel points added later to the inspired text which cause the Hebrew מִפְּנֵי to be interpreted with either a singular pronominal suffix (the refugees of me) or in construct (the refugees of Moab).

Yepheth ben 'Ali - Ps. 89:3 : Ps. 89:3; Isa. 52:13 ☩ "Commentary of Yepheth ben 'Ali in the tenth century: As to myself, I am inclined, with Benjamin of Nehawend, to regard it as alluding to the Messiah. . . He (the prophet) thus gives us to understand two things: In the first instance, that the Messiah will only reach his highest degree of honor after long and severe trials; and secondly, that these trials will be sent upon him as a kind of sign, so that, if he finds himself under the yoke of misfortunes while remaining pious in his actions, he may know that he is the designated one. . . . The expression 'my servant' is applied to the Messiah as it is applied to his ancestor in the verse, 'I have sworn to David my servant.'" Ref-0011, p. 126.

Yeshu : ☩ Rabbinic name for Yeshua which is a deliberate slur made by dropping the last letter (the "ah" sound) to avoid the implication of Him representing "salvation." Then the first three letters are used as an acronym: "Yimach SHmo V'zichrono," meaning "may his name and memory be blotted out."

Yeshua : hosanna☩ ☩ Yeshua means "salvation" (Mtt. 1:21) - the same name as Joshua who is the High Priest of the Books of Ezra and Zechariah.

". . . two references to the God Yahweh found in two New Kingdom Egyptian texts, one dating to ca. 1400 B.C. during the reign of Amenhotep III and the other to ca. 1300 B.C. during the reign of Seti I. These two references to Yahweh are mentioned by S. Herrmann in his Der alttestamentliche Gottesname (1966) and in his Israel in Egypt (1973). The Egyptologist D. yoga - Christian : ☆ + "A most insightful article on this topic comes from a surprising source. The article, titled "There is No Christian Yoga," is written by Yogi Baba Prem, a Hindu Yogi, a Vedavisharada trained in the traditional gurukul system. Listen to what he has to say about Christian yoga: It was quite astonishing to see on the flyer "Christian Yoga! This Thursday night. . . ." I could feel the wheels spinning in my brain. "Christian Yoga," I thought. Now while Christians can practice yoga, I am not aware of any Christian teachings about yoga. Yoga is not a Judeo/Christian word! . . . It is a Hindu word, or more correctly a Sanskrit word from the Vedic civilization. So how did we get "Christian Yoga? . . . Hinduism should reclaim its full heritage and not allow other groups to rename its sacred teachings under their banner, especially when they have no history of those teaching[s] within their own system. If they wish to 'borrow' and say this comes from our brothers and sisters in Hinduism, then that is another thing. . . . Hinduism should guard against its sacred traditions becoming distorted and taken away. This Hindu yogi resents Christians grabbing Hinduism's spiritual practice and calling it Christian. His resentment is understandable. How would we feel if there was suddenly a new craze called Hindu communion. We'd say, "Communion is about Jesus Christ. It can't possibly be called Hindu." How tragic that a Hindu guru sees the problem, but Christian leaders don't." Ref-0812, pp. 96-97

fasting is equal to offering up a scarificie. The logic is: the fat and blood of the animal belong to God alone and by fasting you reduce the fat in your blood. entries represent verses where 'you' cannot refer to the contemporaries of the speaker. Other verses represent passages where this also appears to be the case. "However, as noted earlier, the second-person plural may be employed of those who are not contemporaries. Illustrations of this are found in the immediate context. In Matthew 23:35 the Lord Jesus, referring to the death of Zechariah, used the words "whom you murdered." Obviously Zechariah was killed centuries before Christ. And Jesus said, "You will not see Me until you say, 'Blessed is He who comes in the name of the Lord!'" (v. 39). This speaks of a future generation of Israel that will yet make that grand profession. The pronoun "you" may look backward or forward." Stanley D. Toussaint, "A Critique of the Preterist View of the Olivet Discourse," Ref-0200, Vol. 161 No. 644, October-December 2004, 469-490 p. 488. In Deuteronomy 1:26, Moses uses the pronoun "you" to speak to the children of those who died in the wilderness as if they were the ones who died. "Another argument for the preterist view is that "you" in many texts must refer to the immediate first century audience (7). They cite Matthew 23:35 as proof: "On you may come all the blood shed on the earth . . ." Ironically, that very verse proves the contrary since a "you" is used in it of the people who slew Zechariah in the Old Testament who was long dead. So, "you" can be used historically to refer to "your ancestors" just as it can be used proleptically of "your descendants." For example, "Blessed are you when they revile and persecute you" (Mt. 5:11) in the Sermon on the Mount is not limited to Jesus' immediate audience but also for future generations." Norman L. Geisler, Review of Hank Hanegraff's The Apocalypse Code, [\[http://www.ses.edu/NormGeisler/ReviewApocalypseCode.html\]](#), accessed 20070920]. In the first chapter of Deuteronomy, Moses addresses the descendants of those who died in the wilderness (Deu. 2:14), yet when referring to their ancestors calls them "you." "You have heard a great many Arminian sermons, I dare say; but you never heard an Arminian prayer--for the saints in prayer appear as one in word, and deed and mind. An Arminian on his knees would pray desperately like a Calvinist. He cannot pray about free-will: there is no room for it. Fancy him praying, "Lord, I thank thee I am not like those poor presumptuous Calvinists. Lord, I was born with a glorious free-will; I was born with power by which I can turn to thee of myself; I have improved my grace. If everybody had done the same with their grace that I have, they might all have been saved. Lord, I know thou dost not make us willing if we are not willing ourselves. Thou givest grace to everybody; some do not improve it, but I do. There are many that will go to hell as much bought with the blood of Christ as I was; they had as much of the Holy Ghost given to them; they had as good a chance, and were as much blessed as I am. It was not thy grace that made us to differ; I know it did a great deal, still I turned the point; I made use of what was given me, and others did not--that is the difference between me and them." That is a prayer for the devil, for nobody else would offer such a prayer as that. Ah! when they are preaching and talking very slowly, there may be wrong doctrine; but when they come to pray, the true thing slips out; they cannot help it." -- C. H. Spurgeon, Free Will--A Slave, Sermon No. 52, The New Park Street Pulpit, December 2, 1855.

For the last four years, the Bible and Theology department at Wheaton College in Illinois has studied the biblical and theological literacy of incoming freshmen. These students are intellectually ambitious and spiritually passionate. They represent almost every Protestant denomination and every state in the country. Most come from strong evangelical churches and possess a long history of personal devotion and Christian involvement (regular church attendance, youth groups, camps, missions, etc.). They use the Bible regularly--but curiously, few genuinely know its stories. The Bible has become a springboard for personal piety and meditation, not a book to be read. These students very likely know that David killed Goliath, but they don't know why he did it or that Goliath was a Philistine or who the Philistines were. When asked to complete a test in which a series of events must be placed in order, our students returned surprising results. One-third of the freshmen could not put the following in order: Abraham, the Old Testament prophets, the death of Christ, and Pentecost. Half could not sequence: Moses in Egypt, Isaac's birth, Saul's death, and Judah's exile. One-third could not identify Matthew as an apostle from a list of New Testament names. When asked to locate the biblical book supplying a given story, one-third could not identify Paul's travels in Acts, half did not know that the Christmas story was in Matthew or that the Passover story was in Exodus. Zechariah - stoned : 2Chr. 24:20-22; Jer. 26:20-23; Mtt. 23:35; Luke 11:51 ☪ "Abel is the first martyr in the Bible (Gen. 4:8); Zechariah is most probably the son of Jehoiada, who was stoned to death 'in the court of Yahweh's house' because, speaking by the Spirit of God, he rebuked the king and people of Judah for transgressing the divine commandments (2Chr. 24:20-22). Zechariah (c 800 BC) was not chronologically the last faithful prophet to die as a martyr; some two centuries later a prophet named Uriah was put to death in Jerusalem because his witness was unacceptable to King Jehoiakim (Jer. 26:20-23). But Zechariah is canonically the last faithful prophet to die as a martyr, because his death is recorded in Chronicles, the last book in the Hebrew Bible." Ref-0073, p. 31. ". . . it does not seem possible to demonstrate with any degree of certainty that chronicles was the last book in the Writings at the time of Christ. In the Leningrad Codex and in the Aleppo Codex, for example, Chronicles is the first book of the Writings, and in Jerome's list it is followed by Ezra-Nehemiah and Esther." Thomas J. Finley, "The Book of Daniel in the Canon of Scripture", Ref-0200, Vol. 165 No. 659, April-June 2008, 195:208, pp. 201-202. "Most scholarship is in agreement with this identification of the Zacharias cited here in Mtt. 23:35 as being that of the priest in II Chronicles 24. However, the reference could be to the prophet Zechariah (cp. Zechariah 1:1). If this be the correct interpretation, the Lord Jesus is still making the same charge, but in this instance it would be understood to be in terms of "time" rather than "position" in Scripture. That is, that Abel was the first martyr recorded in the Holy Writ of the OT and the prophet Zechariah the last therein (i.e., that Malachi was not martyred). As Zechariah's death is not mentioned in the book of Zechariah, this would constitute a NT revelation as to his end which would have heretofore been known among the Jews via oral attestation. In such case, Zechariah would be included among those mentioned in Hebrews 11:36-38." Ref-0186, p. 17n1.

Zion - definition : ☉ “. . . the Hebrew word ‘Zion’ means a ‘sign’ and cannot therefore be a static location. Zion refers not so much to a precise location, but to the name of the city of Jerusalem as the religious and political capital of Israel throughout the history of Israel. Later, Zion became a symbol of God’s Chosen People (see for example Isa. 62).” Ref-0051, vol. 3 no. 4, Summer 2001

Zion - out of : Isa. 59:20-21; Rom. 11:26 ☉
 “The phrase ‘out of Zion’ in Romans 11:26 has been seized upon because the Isaiah passage reads, ‘to Zion’ The LXX has it ‘for Zion.’ Paul uses neither the Hebrew nor the LXX. Where did Paul get this phrase? That answer is that Paul is not attempting direct quotation. The reference to turning away ungodliness is not in the Isaiah passage either. Paul is appealing rather to the general doctrine. The Scriptures speak of Christ as both coming to Zion and coming from Zion (cf. Ps. 14:7; 20:2; 53:6; 110:2; 128:5; 134:3; 135:21; Isa. 2:3; Joel 3:16; Amos 1:2).” Ref-0081, p. 191.

Zionism - AGAINST : ☉ + “. . . the Fifth International Sabeel Conference held in Jerusalem, 2004, directed by Naim Ateek, the theme being “Challenging Christian Zionism: Theology, Politics, and the Palestine-Israel Conflict.” The featured speaker was Stephen Sizer, and other presenters included Donald Wagner and Gary Burge. The Conference also met in Ramallah for a day and consulted there with terrorist Yasser Arafat under confinement. The whole aura here was incessantly anti-Judaic and pro-Palestinian, with the official Sabeel Conference Statement declaring: Christian Zionism is a modern theological and political movement that embraces the most extreme ideological positions of Zionism, thereby becoming detrimental to a just peace within Palestine and Israel. The Christian Zionist program provides a worldview where the Gospel is identified with the ideology of empire, colonialism, and militarism. In its extreme form, it places an emphasis on apocalyptic events leading to the end of history rather than living Christ’s love and justice today. We also repudiate the more insidious form of Christian Zionism pervasive in the mainline churches that remains silent in the face of the Israeli occupation of Palestine. Therefore, we categorically reject Christian Zionist doctrines as a false teaching that undermines the biblical message of love, mercy, and justice.” Ref-1263, pp. 105-106
