genealogy - Cainan in Luke missing elsewhere : Gen. 5:9-17; Gen. 10:24; Gen. 11:10; 1Chr. 1:17; Luke 3:35-36 ☆ "Safarti, after Morris, thought that the error came about when an early copyist of Luke inserted the extra name, and from there it was incorporated into later Septuagint (LXX) manuscripts. This is strongly supported by information from the Jewish historian Flavius Josephus (AD 37/38-c. 100) about the genealogies. . . If Josephus did not use the LXX, he must have used some document based on the LXX for it repeats too many of the mistakes of the LXX to be a chance occurrence. It appears that at the time of Josephus, the extra generation of Cainan was not in the LXX text or the document that Josephus used, otherwise Josephus would have included it! The great Baptist theologian Dr. John Gill summarized: Ver. 36. Which was the son of Cainan, &c. This Cainan is not mentioned by Moses in Ge 11:12 nor has he ever appeared in any Hebrew copy of the Old Testament, nor in the Samaritan version, nor in the Targum; nor is he mentioned by Josephus, nor in 1Ch 1:24 where the genealogy is repeated; nor is it in Beza's most ancient Greek copy of Luke: it indeed stands in the present copies of the Septuagint, but was not originally there; and therefore could not be taken by Luke from thence, but seems to be owing to some early negligent transcriber of Luke's Gospel, and since put into the Septuagint to give it authority: I say 'early', because it is in many Greek copies, and in the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental version, even in the Syriac, the oldest of them; but ought not to stand neither in the text, nor in any version: for certain it is, there never was such a Cainan, the son of Arphaxad, for Salah was his son; and with him the next words should be connected." Ref-0003, 13(2) 1999, p. 76. "[Luke] records a "Cainan", the son of Enos (vs. 38) who fathered Mahalaleel (Maleleel). This is in perfect agreement with Genesis. 5:9-17; however Luke 3:36 goes on to say that Noah's (Noe) son Shem (Sem) fathered Arphaxad who in turn fathered a second Cainan who was the father of Salah (Sala, vs. 35). Yet this part of Christ's genealogy as recorded in the Hebrew Masoretic Text of Genesis 11:1-15 states that Shem begat Arphaxad who begat Salah rather than a second Cainan. . . . The solution to this dilemma is twofold. The first and most important aspect deals with the problem that as the name Cainan is not recorded in Genesis, it implies that there is at least one name omitted by Moses in the Genesis account. Indeed . . . if there is one omission it is possible that there may be an indeterminable number of other missing names from the Genesis register, thus the antiquity of man cannot be determined or even approximated from the data of Genesis 5 and 11. However all such objections are of absolutely no force whatsoever as they overlook the obvious simple and direct answer. . . . observe that the interlocking numeric values given to each Patriarch in the two chapters under discussion cannot change the time frame! That is, the Scripture precisely lists the age of each Patriarch (i.e. Arphaxad = 35 years old) when the next Patriarch (i.e. Salah) is born. This, even if the next Patriarch in the recorded genealogy was a great-grandson rather than a son, this procedure of giving the age of one Patriarch when the next is born fixes the two men's lives relative to each other. In so doing, it provides an exact continuous chronology across this time span. The interval between Adam and Abraham is thus clearly maintained and is obtainable. Furthermore, the possibility of missing names (gaps) in the recorded genealogy would in no way alter the duration of this period. The first part of the enigma has been met and answered. Still there remains the question of why the second Cainan was omitted from the Genesis 11 register. It must be frankly admitted that as the Scriptures do not in any way explain the omission, a direct answer has never been offered in the past, neither can one be given at this time. . . . The following scenarios . . . are offered as possible yet plausible reason for the omission of Cainan's name in Genesis 11: . . . Thus, Cainan is probably either (a) a son by adoption and/or a son-in-law, not a direct son -- hence he is not listed in Genesis 10;24 or (b) Cainan is not mentioned in Genesis as the blessing passes over him, going directly from Arphaxad to Salah who is almost certainly Cainan's younger brother. The latter solution is considered to be the most Biblically sound and probable answer to the anomaly. Not only would this result in neither time nor generation being absent, there is much precedent for the setting aside of the elder brother. Examples are Abel for Cain, Japheth for Shem, Haran and Nahor for Abraham, Esau for Jacob, Manasseh for Ephraim, Reuben for Judah, Aaron for Moses, etc. . . . the genealogical lists in Genesis 5 and 11 must be seen to not necessarily reflect the firstborn son from the time aspect but at times may represent the name of the son that received the birthright and the blessing. . . . As demonstrated heretofore, the father's (ancestor's) name is mathematically interlocked to the chosen descendant; hence no gap of time or generation is possible." Ref-0186, pp. 33-36.

They argue that 'this generation' was ended with the Roman destruction of Jerusalem, which symbolized present Jewish rule and the hope of a future national destiny. Futurism, by contrast, understands some uses of 'this generation' as having reference to those to whom Jesus spoke and other uses as having reference to those about whom Jesus spoke, with context being the determining factor." Ref-0051, September/October 2001. See Heb. 3:10 for a usage of this generation which denotes a generation of a different time. (?This' (ταυτη) in the Nestle-Aland text, but 'that' (εκεινος) in the Textus Receptus.) "Some pretribulationists have suggested that 'generation' in this passage means 'race,' or 'nation,' or 'family.' Thus the Lord would be saying that the nation of Israel would not pass away until all of the things spoken of in the Olivet Discourse are fulfilled. Though this is a true statement, this interpretation is based on an unusual meaning for 'generation' (γενεα, genea). Moreover, the 'until' is a problem, for it would imply that the nation of Israel would pass away after the second coming, and Scripture certainly does not teach this." Pettegrew, Larry D., 'Interpretive Flaws In The Olivet Discourse,' Ref-0164, Vol. 13 No. 2, Fall 2002, p. 186. "A study of "this generation" as used in Matthew and in its Old Testament background shows that it speaks of a wicked kind of people through the ages who are steadfastly opposed to the messengers of God and who are described as faithless, evil, perverse, and adulterous." Neil D. Nelson, Jr., "Three Critical Exegetical Issues in Matthew_24: A Dispensational Interpretation", Ref-0785, Volume 11 Number 33, August 2007, 49:68, p. 66. "Commentators have presented two major proposals for the meaning of this phrase in Matthew 23:36. The most prevalent view is that ἡ γενεά αὐτῆ refers to Jesus' Jewish contemporaries. This view asserts that the term γενεά carries a temporal or chronological sense, meaning a group of people living at a specific time period. . . . Most writers who hold this view assert that the judgment issued by Jesus in this verse was at least partially fulfilled in the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple during the lifetime of His contemporaries. A less common proposal is that Jesus was referring to an evil group of people who have existed throughout time. This view asserts a qualitative rather than a temporal sense of γενεά, in which the word means a group of people with shared characteristics. In this view the judgment is not the destruction of the temple, but a judgment that will occur in the last days, either in the Tribulation, or eternal condemnation, or both. The crux of the issue is the specific meaning of γενεά (whether temporal or qualitative) and the nature and timing of the judgment." Susan M. Rieseke, "What is the Meaning of "This Generation" in Matthew_23:36?", Ref-0200, Vol. 165 No. 658, April-June 2008, 209:226, p. 210. "On the basis of the evidence from the context of Matthew 23:36 and especially the connections to the Song of Moses, a tenable understanding of "this generation" can be proposed. It seems unlikely that ἡ γενεά αὐτῆ refers to the group of Jesus' Jewish contemporaries living at that specific time period. As this study has sought to demonstrate, several factors work against this interpretation. First the solidarity that Jesus asserted between the scribes and Pharisees and those who murdered God's messengers in the past is certainly well established in verses 34-35. Thus it seems best, as suggested, to understand the epithet "this generation" in verse 36 as referring to the entire corporate entity composed of people from the past and present, not just the Jews of that time period. As Gundry writes, Jesus' "involving them in the bygone murder of an OT prophet (v. 35) shows that he does not take 'this generation' in a sense chronologically limited to Jesus' contemporaries. . . . In other words, if the 'you' who constitute 'this generation' includes those who murdered Zechariah in OT times, 'this generation' can hardly bear the chronological limitation usually imposed on it." Second, the nature of the charge (that of all the bloodguilt for present and past martyrdom) that is brought against this γενεά seems to be too weighty a charge to be laid on just one group of Jews living at a certain time period. . . . That God would lay all the bloodguiltiness of millions of murders on only one group of people who happened to rebel at an especially "unlucky" time in history hardly seems consistent with His justice or with biblical theology as a whole. Third, the only sentence that correlates with this heavy charge against "this generation" is eschatological judgment, including eternal condemnation, a judgment confirmed in both the Old and New Testaments. While the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple was certainly devastating to the Jews of that time period, to correlate with the charge, one would have to prove it was exceedingly more devastating than the historical judgments that happened to Israel in the past, but this is difficult to assert. Fourth, the parallel to Deuteronomy 32 does not support the temporal sense. To the contrary, a temporal sense in this passage is simply untenable. If the temporal understanding of ἡ γενεά αὐτῆ is untenable, the second option must be considered, namely a group of people with shared characteristics. . . . In a significant study Nelson analyzes the phrase . . . and he concludes that it refers to "a wicked kind of people who reject Jesus and face eschatological judgment." . . . Thus it is best to understand "this generation" as referring to an evil spiritual family existing throughout time, who killed God's messengers in the past, will murder still more, and will be charged and sentenced to judgment for their crimes in the last days." Susan M. Rieseke, "What is the Meaning of "This Generation" in Matthew_23:36?", Ref-0200, Vol. 165 No. 658, April-June 2008, 209:226, pp. 222-225.

I like Mathews better on the first chapters, but this is an excellent commentary. It provides a lot of background material. 4. H. C. Leupold ? Leupold's work is older and more conservative than the above works. His comments are theologically rich and he is quite entertaining when he fences with the liberals. He makes a good complement to the above works. 5. G. C. Aalders ? Quite hard to find, these volumes by a top Dutch OT scholar of the mid-Twentieth century are thought-provoking and theologically rich. 6. John D. Currid ? Conservative and easy to read, but with plenty of solid teaching and good insights. If one is busy, this would be an excellent place to go to. I prefer it over the similar fine study by Kidner. 7. Allen P. Ross ? Called "Creation & Blessing" this is an excellent contribution to Genesis, especially for the preacher. An additional plus is that it's premillennial. 8. Philip Eveson ? A really fine commentary by a Welsh evangelical scholar. Although absorbed a bit with covenant theology, the author's sensitivity to the text makes it a meaty exposition. 9. W. H. Griffith Thomas ? I realize that I should fill up this list with names like Brueggemann (quite liberal) and Hartley (evangelical) but I think this book is a superb book for the busy preacher. It makes the student ask the right questions, and its character studies are rich. 10. Robert S. Candlish ? Amid the howls of disappointment for Waltke's absence I stand by this choice. Scholars like Longman don't think much of it, but these "Studies in Genesis" are a great boon to the thinking pastor. Aside from the first chapter which promotes the Gap Theory, these lectures are very helpful for worldview thinking for the person who knows how to use them. Good follow-ups include the great little work by Derek Kidner (TOTC) and the impressive one by John Hartley (NIBC). Waltke is good of course, but I was a bit disappointed with it. Henry Morris's "The Genesis Record" is unique in its way and shouldn't be ignored. He relies a lot on Leupold. John Calvin is certainly worthy of honorable mention, as is Andrew Fuller. Duane Garrett's introduction "Reading Genesis" is very helpful." Geneva Bible - Breeches Bible : Gen. 3:7 ☪ + "The Geneva Bible was the first translation to print each verse as a paragraph and to put words in italics not represented in the original texts. It is sometimes called the "Breeches Bible" because it says that Adam and Eve "sewed figge tree leaves together, and made themselves breeches" (Gen. 3:7). . . . It was the Bible used by Shakespeare in his later plays; it was the Bible of the Jamestown settlement in Virginia; it was the Bible brought to Plymouth on the Mayflower. And it was a Bible, with its improved Hebrew and Greek scholarship, that was an intermediate step between Tyndale and the King James Version." Ref-0236, p. 181. "This is the Bible of the Reformers, produced in Switzerland by Puritan refugees who had fled the persecution of the Catholic Queen Mary. This Bible quickly became the household Bible of English-speaking Protestants, and it was the Bible used by Shakespeare and carried to America on the Mayflower. . . . The Geneva Bible introduced several innovations into English Bible translation: It was printed in a roman typeface instead of the difficult-to-read black gothic lettering, it used italics for words not found in the original text but needed to make sense in English, and it divided the text into numbered verses. Because of its rendering of Genesis 3:7 (where Adam and Eve are said to have sewn "breeches" for themselves, the Geneva Bible has been known to posterity as the Breeches Bible." Geneva Bible - popularity : ☪ "Perhaps the greatest -- and certainly the most curious -- tribute to the popularity of the Geneva Bible is the remarkable fact that, when citing from the Bible, the preface to the King James Bible itself chose to use the Geneva translation rather than the new translation that the preface was intended to introduce and commend. The greatest obstacle faced by the King James Version as it sought to establish itself in the seventeenth century was the continuing popularity of the Geneva Bible." Ref-0686, p. 99. "The simple truth is that the "new Bible" was initially regarded with polite disinterest. Nobody at the time really liked the new translation very much. Even some of those who were prominently involved in the translation of the King James Bible seemed hesitant to use it, preferring to cite from the Geneva Bible instead -- hardly a commendation for their work. The King James Bible might be the Bible of the English religious and political establishment; it had a long way to go before it became the Bible for the English people." Ref-0686, p. 278.

Although most scientists agree that the earth's global average surface temperature has increased (by approximately 0.6 deg. Instead, they believe the warming is more likely to be part of a natural cycle. Furthermore, they note that rising temperatures may, in fact, result in far greater benefits to mankind, and that these benefits are rarely considered or taken into account by those who desire to reverse global warming. Indeed, over 31,000 scientists--including more than 9,000 with a Ph.D. (15 times more than the number involved in the IPCC process)--have signed a petition pointing out these issues." Andrew S. "As men now judge of revelation, Christianity dwindles down to be nothing but a "plan of salvation" for individuals, and if St. John's Gospel and a few of the Epistles be left them they are content. How different was the attitude of mind and heart displayed by St. Paul! In the Apostle's view the crisis which seemed the catastrophe of everything the old prophets had foretold of God's purposes for earth, opened up a wider and more glorious purpose still, which should include the fulfillment of them all; and rapt in the contemplation, he exclaimed, "Oh the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out!" Gog - Magog : Num. 24:7; Eze. 38:2-3; Rev. 20:8 ☩ "[T]his prophecy of Ezekiel concerning Gog and Magog cannot be identified with the prophecy in Revelation 20:7-10 for three reasons. The former takes place before the Kingdom is established on earth; the latter after this Kingdom. Also, in Ezekiel the invasion comes only from the north, but in Revelation it comes from the 'four quarters of the earth.' Furthermore, the rebellion of Gog and Magog and their destruction in Revelation 20:7-10 marks the ushering in of the eternal state (Rev. 20:11-15); but in Ezekiel it is preliminary to the Millennial Kingdom on earth." Ref-0183, p. 187. ". . . a variant reading [of Numbers 24:7] substitutes "Gog" for "Agag." This reading has wide support, being found in the Septuagint, the Samaritan Pentateuch, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion. According to this reading, Balaam foresees a king from Jacob who would be exalted over Gog, the end-time enemy of Israel (Ezek 38:3). Thus, the passage links this prophecy with Messiah's day, when He will have victory over the eschatological foes of Israel. The "Gog" reading is supported by the context, in which Balaam says he is speaking of "the end of days" (Num. 24:14). . . . Additionally, in Ezek 38:17, there is a recognition that Gog is known from earlier Scripture. There the Lord addresses Gog and asks, "Are you the one I spoke about in former times?" This is an obvious reference to the variant reading in Num 27:7." Ref-1272, pp. 38-39.

Fourth, his consuming egotism was displayed in his blatant challenge, 'I defy the armies of Israel' (1S. 17:10). Fifth, the mysterious number 666 (the number of the Antichrist) is connected with Goliath. Note the three sixes. (a) He was six cubits high (1S. 17:4). (b) Six pieces of armour are enumerated - helmet, coat of mail, greaves, target, staff, and shield (1S. 17:5-7). (c) His spear's head weighed six hundred shekels of iron (1S. 17:7). gospels - synoptic - independent : ☩ "In an inductive study of the triple-tradition sections of the Synoptic Gospels, the ballot must go decisively in favor of an independent origin for each of the Synoptic Gospels. Had copying of any kind occurred among the writers, a minimum of at least 50% -- and probably much higher -- of identical words would be expected. A figure of 16% falls far short of that." Robert L. Thomas, "Discerning Synoptic Gospel Origins: An Inductive Approach (Part One of Two Parts)", Ref-0164, 15/1 (Spring 2004) 3-38, p. 11. "Agreements between two Gospels against a third Gospel present another line of evidence in favor of the independent origins of the Synoptic Gospels. Inductive investigation leads to the conclusion that the relative scarcity of agreements of Matthew and Luke against Mark means nothing by way of pointing to Mark as a literary source of the other two. Further, proposed interdependence explanations of why Matthew and Luke can agree against Mark when Mark is their source are assumptions rather than inductive conclusions. Inductive reasoning leads to the conclusion that oral and noncanonical written tradition based on eyewitness testimony was a basis for the Synoptic Gospels because of the random way they agree and disagree with one another. No proposal of literary interdependence has provided a satisfactory and factually based explanation for how the writers could have depended on the writings of each other in penning their books when two Gospels agree against a third in all possible combinations." Robert L. Thomas, "Discerning Synoptic Gospel Origins: An Inductive Approach (Part One of Two Parts)", Ref-0164, 15/1 (Spring 2004) 3-38, p. 15. "The use of OT citations by these Gospels furnishes a standard for ascertaining literary independence when it reflects a 79% average of identical-word agreement between two Gospel citing the same OT passage. Application of that standard to two Gospel accounts of the same episodes discloses that their average agreement is only 30%, far short of the 79% standard for literary interdependence. The low percentage of identical agreements is a strong argument against literary interdependence, ruling it out on an inductive basis." Robert L. Thomas, "Discerning Synoptic Gospel Origins: An Inductive Approach (Part Two)", Ref-0164, Vol. 16 No. 1 (Spring 2005) 7-47, p. 7. "In their use of the OT, they [the synoptic gospels] agree with one another far more often in using identical words than they do if, for instance, Matthew and Luke were using Mark as a source, as proposed in the Markan priority view of Gospel origins. . . . The outcome of all the word-counting brings the inevitable conclusion that the theory of literary interdependence among the Synoptic writers is a myth that cannot be substantiated on an inductive basis." Robert L. Thomas, "Discerning Synoptic Gospel Origins: An Inductive Approach (Part Two)", Ref-0164, Vol. 16 No. 1, (Spring 2005) 7-47, pp. 12-13.

We find, for example, that the substance of 606 out of the 661 verses of Mark appears in Matthew, and that some 350 of Mark's verses reappear with little material change in Luke. Or, to put it another way, out of the 1,068 verses of Matthew, about 500 contain material also found in Mark; of the 1,149 verses of Luke, about 350 are paralleled in Mark. Altogether, there are only 31 verses in Mark which have no parallel either in Matthew or Luke." Ref-0239, p. 27.

gospels - synoptic - reliability : ☪ + "The discrepancies between the narratives of the several evangelists, when carefully examined, will not be found sufficient to invalidate their testimony. Many seeming contradictions will prove, upon closer scrutiny, to be in substantial agreement; and it may be confidently asserted that there are none that will not yield, under fair and just criticism. If these different accounts of the same transactions were in strict verbal conformity with each other, the argument against their credibility would be much stronger. All that is asked for these witnesses is that their testimony may be regarded as we regard the testimony of men in the ordinary affairs of life." Ref-0788, p. 35. "Had the evangelists been false historians," says Dr. Chalmers, "they would not have committed themselves upon so many particulars. They would not have furnished the vigilant inquirers of that period with such an effectual instrument for bringing them into discredit with the people, nor foolishly supplied, in every page of their narrative, so many materials for a cross-examination, which would infallibly have disgraced them." "Although no one is capable of responding to the general call of the gospel, in the case of the elect God works intensively through a special calling so that they do respond in repentance and faith. As a result of this conversion, God regenerates them. The special calling is simply an intensive and effectual working by the Holy Spirit. It is not the complete transformation which constitutes regeneration, but it does render the conversion of the individual both possible and certain." Ref-0139, p. 933. "The work of common grace does not require a willingness to receive the truth, but efficacious grace is an immediate act of God which by its nature cannot be resisted?. This implies two things: (a) That the operation of God is not an outward constraint upon the human will, but that it accords with the laws of our mental constitution. We reject the term 'irresistible' as implying a coercion and compulsion which is foreign to the nature of God's working in the soul. (b) That the operation of God is the originating cause of that new disposition of the affections, and that new activity of the will, by which the sinner accepts Christ. The cause is not in the response of the will to the presentation of motives by God, nor in any mere cooperation of the will of man with the will of God, but is an almighty act of God in the will of man, by which its freedom to choose God as its end is restored and rightly exercised (John 1:12-13)?. While in the experience of the individual, faith in Christ is a result of choice and [an] act of the human will, it is nevertheless a work of efficacious grace. Efficacious grace never operates in a heart that is still rebellious, and no one is ever saved against his will. It is rather in keeping with the principle that 'it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work, for his good pleasure' (Phil 2:13)." Ref-0019, pp. 123-124.

grammar - basic definitions : ☪ + For a clear description of the function and interrelationship of grammatical terms (e.g., noun, verb, adjective), see Ref-0957, pp. 62-64.

grammar - book of Revelation : Revelation - book of - grammar ☆ grammar - case : ☪ + "As used in the expression of a thought the noun may bear various relations to the rest of the sentence. It may be the subject proper, or it may qualify the subject, or it may function in various ways in the predicate. This variety in the fundamental relations of the noun we call CASE." Ref-0957, p. 62.

grammar - consonants vs. vowels : ☪ + "The varieties of enunciation are secured by varying the positions of the organs of the mouth. These variations may be separated into two principal classes, those made by obstructed breath and those made by unobstructed breath. . . . The consonants are made by obstructed breath. The vowels are made by unobstructed breath." Ref-0957, pp. 20-21.

grammar - declension vs. conjugation : ☪ + "In biblical studies, the changes in nouns and pronouns are referred to as declension. This term is not used for the changes that occur with verbs. Changes in verb forms in the biblical languages are referred to as conjugation." Ref-1162, p. 89.

grammar - dependent clause : ☪ + "A dependent clause is a collection of words that cannot stand alone. It has meaning only when it is part of a complete sentence; it is dependent upon that sentence. For example, in English the clause "if I go home" is not a sentence. It is incomplete when standing on its own. It is therefore dependent on the main sentence. "If I go home, I will eat dinner." . . . As you are looking for the main subject and verb in a sentence, you will never find them in the dependent clause." Ref-0085, p. 59.

grammar - importance : ☉ + "Dr. A. M. Fairbairn once said: "No man can be a theologian who is not a philologist. He who is no grammarian is no divine." Ref-1236, p. ix-xi. "Moulton protests against the notion that grammar is dull: "And yet there is no subject which can be made more interesting than grammar, a science which deals not with dead rocks or mindless vegetables, but with the ever changing expression of human thought." Ref-1236, p. ix-xi grammar - indirect object : ☉ + "The indirect object, technically, is the person/thing that is "indirectly" affected by the action of the verb. This means that the indirect object is somehow involved in the action described by the verb, but not directly. For example, "Karen threw Brad a ball." The direct object is "ball," since it is directly related to the action of the verb. It is what was thrown. But "Brad" is also related to the action of the verb, since the ball was thrown to him. "Brad" is therefore the indirect object." Ref-0085, p. 46.

grammar - inflection : ☉ + "Sometimes the form of a word changes when it performs different functions in a sentence or when the word changes its meaning. This is called "inflection." For example, the personal pronoun is "he" if it refers to a male, and "she" if it refers to a female. It is "she" when it is the subject of a sentence . . . but changes to "her" when it is the direct object. . . ." Ref-0085, p. 22.

grammar - modifier : ☉ + Elements which are used to modify the subject. The modifier of a subject may be one or more of the following. definite article : the book possessive pronoun : his book interrogative pronoun : which book indefinite pronoun : any book demonstrative pronoun : this book attribute adjective : large book adjectival participle : engaging book adjectival infinitive : book to be read prepositional phrase : book on the shelf adjectival clause : book that makes sense to me Ref-0133 133, 32, See grammar - complement grammar - part of speech : ☉ + "Remembering then always to consider the word in connection with its sentence, the student should ask himself the following questions to help him find out what part of speech a word is: (1) Is it the name of anything? If so, then it is a noun. (2) Can a noun which is mentioned or thought of before be substituted for the word without altering the sense? Then it is a pronoun. (3) Does it answer any of the questions: 'What kind?', 'How many?', 'Which?', with regard to some noun? Then it is an adjective. (4) Does it make a statement, ask a question, or give a command? Then it is a verb. (6) Does it answer the questions: 'How?', 'When?', 'Where?' Then it is an adverb ('How?', 'When?', and 'Where?' are also themselves adverbs.) (6) Does it stand before a noun or pronoun to show its relation to something else? Then it is a preposition. (Another test of a preposition is that it is a word which is not a verb but which can stand before 'him' and grammar - participle : ☉ + "A participle looks like a verb, but it isn't. You can think of a participle as a verb that acts like an adjective in a sentence. Look at the difference: 1. I had known that Tom would be famous one day. 2. Known for his outstanding tenor voice, Tom was famous. In the first sentence, had known is the main verb. Known in the second sentence describes Tom; it is adjectival and hence a participle." Ref-0133, p. 35.

grammar - predicate : ☉ + "Grammatically, the "predicate" is the verb and everything that follows it. It is what is left when you remove the subject and anything modifying it." Ref-0085, p. 32n4. ". . . the tree is green. This group of words we call a sentence. Notice that this typical expression of thought contains two elements: the designation of an object--the tree, and an assertion about that object--is green. The first element we call the subject, and the second the predicate. The basis of this complete expression of thought consisted of only two words--tree is. Hence the basal element in the subject is the noun, and the basal element in the predicate is the verb. Thus we conclude that the sentence lies at the foundation of syntax, and its essential parts, the noun and the verb, constitute the fundamental elements in syntax." Ref-0957, pp. 61-62.

grammar - prepositional phrase : ☉ + "Prepositions are those little words that locate a noun in time, space or direction. Prepositional phrases always begin with a preposition and end with a noun (or other substantive): 'around the house,' 'through the door,' 'behind him.' You have to decide what part of speech these phrases are by looking at how they work in a sentence." Ref-0133, p. 34. "The preposition together with its object and modifiers is called a "prepositional phrase." Ref-0085, p. 58. "It is called "preposition" because in its use it is regularly placed before the noun." Ref-0957, p. 96. "While adverbs qualify the action, motion, or state of verbs as to manner, place, time, and extent, prepositions do also; but, in addition to this, they mark the direction and relative position of the action, motion, or state expressed by the verb. Prepositions then attend upon verbs to help them express more specifically their relation to substantives." Ref-0957, p. 97. "A very frequent use of prepositions is in composition with words for the purpose of expressing emphasis or intensity. Grammarians term this the "perfective" use of the preposition. One can often detect shades of meaning from this usage that are otherwise impossible to discern." Ref-0957, p. 98. "A very important fact to remember in studying prepositions is that each one, unlike the English use, may be used to express one or several either kindred or diversified ideas. The best way to determine the meanings of a preposition is to study it in its various contexts and not its various uses." Ref-0957, pp. 98-99.

grammar - relative pronouns - who, what, which : ☉ + You can use who for people. You can use that for people and things. You can use which for only things.

grammar - verb - intransitive : ☉ + "Intransitive verbs cannot take a direct object. In the example, "the king perished in the battle," the verb "perished" cannot take a direct object. Other examples of intransitive verbs include "to live," "to die" and "to fast." Ref-0184, p. 138.

grammar - verb - stative : ☉ + "Stative verbs are used to describe a state of being. In the example, "the priest is old," the verbal construction "is old" describes the state or condition of the subject (the priest). In English, a stative (or state-of-being) idea is expressed with a form of the verb "to be" (is) and an adjective (old)." Ref-0184, p. 138.

grammar - verb - transitive : ☉ + "Transitive verbs may take a direct object. In the example "the prophet wrote the book," the word "book" is the direct object of the verb "wrote" because it receives the verbal action." Ref-0184, p. 138.

There is little feel for Greek as a language; and so there is the temptation to display what has been learned in study, which as often as not is a great deal of lexical information without the restraining influence of context. Greek - importance of : ☩ + "There is nothing like the Greek New Testament to rejuvenate the world, which came out of the Dark Ages with the Greek Testament in its hand.

Erasmus wrote in the Preface to his Greek Testament about his own thrill of delight:

"These holy pages will summon up the living image of His mind. They will give you Christ Himself, talking, healing, dying, rising, the whole Christ in a word; they will give Him to you in an intimacy so close that He would be less visible to you if He stood before your eyes." The Greek New Testament is the New Testament. All else is translation." Ref-1236, pp. xviii-xix. "At the age of sixteen John Brown, of Haddington, startled a bookseller by asking for a copy of the Greek Testament. He was barefooted and clad in ragged homespun clothes. He was a shepherd boy from the hills of Scotland. "What would you do with that book?" a professor scornfully asked. "I'll try to read it," the lad replied, and proceeded to read off a passage in the Gospel of John. He went off in triumph with the coveted prize, but the story spread that he was a wizard and had learned Greek by the black art. He was actually arraigned for witchcraft, but in 1746 the elders and deacons at Abernethy gave him a vote of acquittal, though the minister would not sign it. His letter of defence, Sir W. Robertson Nicoll says (The British Weekly, Oct. 3, 1918), "deserves to be reckoned among the memorable letters of the world." John Brown became a divinity student and finally professor of divinity. In the chapel at Mansfield College, Oxford, Brown's figure ranks with those of Doddridge, Fry, Chalmers, Vinet, Schleiermacher. He had taught himself Greek while herding his sheep, and he did it without a grammar. Surely young John Brown of Haddington should forever put to shame those theological students and busy pastors who neglect the Greek Testament, though teacher, grammar, lexicon are at their disposal." Greek - influence - Jews : ☩ + "A long-standing debate about the languages of the land of Israel at the time of Jesus is rapidly being resolved by recognition of a very strong Greek presence. It is startling to learn that 40 percent of the pre-A.D. 70 burial inscriptions in Jerusalem are in Greek." Ref-1200, p. 117. "In any case, the Bible in Greek was widely used by Greek-speaking Jews, but evidently not highly regarded by some of the more strict Jews in the land of Israel. Most early Christians adopted the Greek Scriptures as their own. By the second century A.D., Jewish scholars produced their own editions in reaction to the Christians' use of the Greek Old Testament. These editions sought to correct apparent mistranslations used by the Christians in promoting their faith and generally to conform the Greek to the Hebrew text that was most widely used in the land of Israel." grammar, than could have been produced by accident; so strong that no philologist could examine all the three without believing them to have sprung from some common source which no longer exists." Ref-1236, pp. 10-11.

Greek - text - Byzantine - bias against : ☩ + "There is a "dead-weight" of traditional antipathy toward the Byzantine text that just cannot allow itself to believe that the K-text is able to furnish any really valuable evidence for New Testament text criticism. This inherited antipathy has created a giant drag against progress in textual matters." Ref-078Z, p. 76. "The simplicity of the byzantine-priority hypothesis stands in stark contrast to the transmissional history demanded by the modern eclectic models (reasoned or thoroughgoing). Those models see the original text scattered to the four winds at a very early period, with a later development of disparate texttypes, none of which can claim to represent the "lost" autographs. Under those systems, the Byzantine text is considered to have arisen from an officially promulgated formal recension, or from an unguided "process" that involved a relatively unsystematic selection and conflation of readings taken from the (supposedly earlier) disparate Western and Alexandrian texttypes. In either case, this uncritical selection of readings then was coupled with various stylistic and harmonizing improvements that supposedly typified the later scribal mindset. The problem lies in explaining how such a haphazard procedure ever could result in the extensively disseminated but relatively unified Byzantine Textform. These suppositions (which lack historical confirmation) are seen to be unwarranted once the full theoretical and practical conspectus of the byzantine-priority position has been examined in light of the existing evidence." Ref-0493, p. vi.

Greek - text - Byzantine - conservative : ☩ + "The attitude of the Antiochians toward Scripture seems to suggest that they were jealous in the care of it. It will be remembered that the school of Antioch was the school of "literal" interpretation, while the school in Alexandria championed the allegorical method. This is not simply that the Alexandrian Christians had a low opinion of Scripture. Antioch, however, had a much narrower and more conservative view of the canon than Alexandrian, if the views of Africanus and Origen in their exchange of letters can be taken as criteria of their respective schools. It will be recalled that Africanus took Origen to task for citing parts of the apocryphal books of the LXX as Scripture, and that Origen responded by defending the use of the LXX over against the Hebrew." Ref-078Z, p. 115.

Greek - text - Byzantine - early readings : ☩ + "Beginning with the second edition of Hort's introductory volume in 1896, various writers have called attention to Byzantine readings which have found support in early witnesses discovered since the time of WH. Francis Crawford Burkitt, an enthusiastic supporter of WH who wrote the "Additional Notes" in the second edition of the Introduction, has noted that the (then) recently discovered Sinaitic Syriac, though often supporting the Alexandrian text, occasionally agrees with the Syrian text in “distinctive” readings. Later, in an article on the newly discovered Chester Beatty Papyri, Burkitt comments on Byzantine agreements in these manuscripts, as do C. C. Tarelli and others in Journal of Theological Studies, Gunther Zuntz in 1946 in the Schweich Lectures on The Text of the Epistles, and E. C. Colwell in 1961 in his article on “The Origin of Text-types of New Testament Manuscripts.” Bruce Metzger, in “The Lucianic Recension of the Greek Bible,” gives a list of seven examples of papyrus-supported Byzantine readings. In a footnote, he lists some sixteen other references of “distinctively” Byzantine readings which are also found in *p*⁶⁶. Ref-0787, pp. 55-56. “List I (see pp. 145-159) displays some 150 distinctively Byzantine readings now found to have early Egyptian papyri supporting them. Distinctively Byzantine readings are readings which are supported by the bulk of the later manuscripts but which at the same time are opposed (or not supported) by the principal manuscripts and witnesses to the Alexandrian and Western texts. . . . But it is startling from the standpoint of the WH theory to find that so-called “Byzantine” readings not only existed early but were present in Egypt before the end of the second century.” Ref-0787, pp. 61-62. “Numerous distinctively Byzantine readings now proved early would seem to reverse the burden of proof. Instead of assuming that characteristically Byzantine readings are late, it may be more logical and more in accord with the facts to assume that they are early. The burden of proof now appears to rest on whoever claims that a Byzantine reading is late. Furthermore, making textual decisions on the basis of how three or four “old” uncials read should be abandoned because they do not give a complete picture of the second century traditions.” Ref-0787, p. 65. “. . . it is concluded that the papyri supply valid evidence that distinctively Byzantine readings were not created in the fourth century but were already in existence before the end of the second and that, because of this, Byzantine readings merit serious consideration.” Ref-0787, p. 69.

Greek - text - Byzantine - editing minor : ☪ + “. . . if the theory of WH as to the derivation of the Byzantine text is no longer supported by the data, then the Byzantine text should be considered an independent witness to the text of the New Testament. It is not meant to suggest that the Byzantine text has undergone no editing. What is affirmed here is that the theory of a drastic and eclectic editing using Alexandrian and Western texts appears far less plausible now than it did in the days when the theory was promulgated by WH.” Ref-0787, p. 101. “It seems unlikely, however, that Antioch, so literal in the interpretation of the Scriptures would undertake or sponsor such a radical re-working of the text . . . [as] called for by the theory of WH. . . . In fact, it is the conviction of some textual critics that the editing of the Byzantine text actually appears to have been less drastic than that which is found in other main text-types. This, at least, became the considered opinion of Jose M. Bover. Bover, in making a special study of the codices which support each variant, came to the following conclusions concerning the kinds of alterations which characterize the various text-types: ‘The important or serious deviations are found in the Alexandrians and the Westerns, the slight ones in the Antiochians. . . . In profound modifications the Alexandrians and the Westerns are to be suspected, in additions principally the Westerns, in slight changes or retouches the Antiochians. . . . BS[~~N~~]D manage the axe or the scalpel, the Antiochians, the file or varnish.’ Hoskier also raises the question as to which text is responsible for the greatest revising. His answer is that “the ~~N~~B group should be given the palm. Otherwise we cannot explain the facts.”” Ref-0787, p. 121.

Greek - text - Byzantine - fathers : Luke 10:21; Luke 12:5; Luke 12:22; Luke 12:31; John 2:24; John 4:31; John 13:26; Rom. 10:14; 1Cor. 4:11; 1Cor. 5:10; 1Cor. 7:5; 1Cor. 7:7; 1Cor. 9:7; 1Cor. 9:21; Eph. 2:12; Php. 1:14; Heb. 11:32; 1Pe. 2:5 ☪ “Instances in the list where Byzantine readings have early Fathers for their support are as follows: 1) Luke 10:21, Clement; 2) Luke 12:5, Tertullian; 3) Luke 12:22, Clement; 4) Luke 12:31, Clement and Marcion; and 5) John 2:24, Origen. Origen also attests 6) John 4:31; and 7) John 13:26. In the Epistles, example of patristic support may be found as follows: 8) Romans 10:14, Clement; 9) 1Cor. 4:11, Clement and Origen; 10) 1Cor. 5:10, Origen; 11) 1Cor. 7:5, Origen; 12) 1Cor. 7:7, Origen; 13) 1Cor. 9:7, Origen; 14) 1Cor. 9:21, Origen; 15) Eph. 2:12, (Origen) and Tertullian; 16) Php. 1:14, Marcion; 17) Heb. 11:32, Clement; 18) 1Pe. 2:5, Clement and Origen.” Ref-0787, p. 79. “. . . this argument from silence of the Fathers is an argument from silence as far as Antioch is concerned. Supporters of the WH theory point out that Chrysostom (who flourished in the last half of the fourth century) is the earliest Father to use the Byzantine text. However, they customarily neglect to mention that there are no earlier Antiochian Fathers than Chrysostom whose literary remains are extensive enough so that their New Testament quotations may be analyzed as to the type of text they support. The silence-of-the-fathers argument has been asked to bear more weight than it is able to sustain. How can fathers of other areas using other local text-types be expected to witness to the Antiochian text? And how could it be expected that the Antiochian text (i.e., the early form of it) can be attested by Fathers who have left little or no writings?” Ref-0787, pp. 80-81.

Greek - text - Byzantine - numerous : ☪ + “. . . with regard to the multitude of MSS associated with the Byzantine area: a) in contrast with the West, Greek was the native or primary language therefore Greek MSS would naturally multiply; and b) the Byzantine area was not overwhelmed by the Moslems till the mid-fifteenth century with the fall of Constantinople in 1453. Because of this there was no “cut-off” of manuscript reproduction prior to that time. For these reasons, together with the first and second given above, it seems natural and to be expected that the Greek witnesses of this area should far out-number those of the other locales.” Ref-0787, p. 48.

of seven basic findings: 1) many of its distinctive readings, formerly thought to be late, conflate, and edited, are attested by early papyri, and 2) it was discovered that Western-Byzantine agreements also go back to the second century. Such readings are early and widespread, but though they were rejected by the Alexandrian text, they have been preserved from deep in the second century by the separate Byzantine and Western traditions. Furthermore, these K-Western agreements (contrary to WH) have their origin in the East not in the West. 3) The silence of the Church Fathers in regard to K readings is explainable because a) it is not as absolute as has been maintained, and b) it has a logical explanation. Lack of Patristic support from non-Byzantine areas (i.e., from non-Byzantine Fathers) is invalid evidence for an argument that the Byzantine text did not exist at an early period. Even without such evidence and reasoning, however, WH’s silence of the Fathers argument (the argument upon which their whole theory rested) has been strikingly offset by the discovery of Byzantine readings in the early papyri. 4) It was found that the longer or “conflate” readings are not a sign of lateness in the text; neither are such readings restricted to the Byzantine text. Some “conflates” have been found in the Western and even in the Alexandrian text-type including Vaticanus itself. The papyri reveal that longer and what have been called “conflate” readings were already in existence in the second century. 5) The composite nature of the Byzantine constitutes yet another line of evidence attesting the early existence of the K readings where the testimony of the various strands is united. Additional support from another text-type appears to insure the second-century existence of a reading with such attestation. 6) Others have called attention to the early age of K readings. To the above may be added a reminder that the idea of the ancient character of Byzantine readings, of course, is not new or original with this writer. The remarks of Zuntz, Tarelli, and Colwell as mentioned above, together with others, indicate that a number of New Testament scholars have been calling attention to the early age of Byzantine readings. 7) Deliberate changes in all the text-types appear to antedate A.D. 200. Kilpatrick notes with approval the statement of Vogels that, “as distinct from errors, most deliberate changes, if not all were made by A.D. 200,” and he makes the point that “recent discoveries confirm this.”” Ref-0787, pp. 95-96.

Greek grammar - accents : ☪ + “The accentual tradition is so deeply rooted in the minds of classical scholars and of reputable publishers that the sight of a naked unaccented text seems almost indecent. Yet from the point of view of academic integrity, the case against their use is overwhelming. The oldest literary texts regularly using accents of any sort date from the first century B.C. The early uncial manuscripts of the New Testament had no accents at all. The accentual system now in use dates only from the ninth century A.D. . . . To learn them properly consumes a great deal of time and effort with no corresponding reward in the understanding of the language. When ingrained prejudice has been overcome, the clean unaccented text becomes very pleasant to the eye. In Hellenistic Greek the value of accents is confined to the distinguishing of pairs of words otherwise the same. In this whole book it means only four groups of words: εἶ and εἰ; the indefinite and interrogative pronouns; parts of the article and the relative pronoun; and parts of the present and future indicative active of liquid verbs.” Ref-0817, pp. vii-viii. “The acute accent shows that the pitch originally went up a little on the accented syllable. . . The grave accent shows that the voice originally dropped a little on the accented syllable. . . the circumflex accent shows that the voice rose and then dropped a little on the accented syllable.” Ref-0085 pp. 13-14.

Greek grammar - accents - proclitic, enclitic : ☪ + “Some words appear to have two accents. There are certain words that lose their accent to the following word (“proclitic”) or the preceding word (“enclitic”), and you end up with a double accent on one word and no accent on the other.” There will not always be a double accent involved. “A proclitic is a word which has no accent, and is pronounced with the word following; as ἐκ θεοῦ [εκ]. . . . An enclitic is a word which, whenever possible, loses its accent and is pronounced with the word preceding; as ὁ θεός ἐστιν ἀγαθός [εστιν].” Ref-0957, p. 30.

Greek grammar - accents - value : ☪ + “Accents serve use very well in three areas. . . . Pronunciation . . . Memorization . . . Identification. There are a few words that are identical except for their accents. Knowing the accents for these few words can be of great help. There are also a few verbal forms where knowing the accent is helpful.” Ref-0085 p. 15. However, note that the accents were late additions so are always open to possible question.

Greek grammar - accidence vs. syntax : ☪ + “Accidence deals with the structural form of words. Syntax deals with the grammatical relations between words. Accidence deals with the facts which result from incidental development, while syntax deals with the rational principles of thought expression. Accidence differs in every different dialect, while syntax is largely the same for all human speech.” Ref-0957, p. 59.

Greek grammar - accusative - case : Greek grammar - cases ✧

Greek grammar - adjectives : ☪ + Adjectives can function either adjectivally or substantivally. When functioning adjectivally, it can either be in the attributive position (preceded by the article) or in the predicate position (not preceded by the article), in which case you may need to supply the verb “is.” Attributive adjectives agree with the noun they modify in case, number, and gender. When an adjective functions substantivally, its case is determined by its function as is true of any adjective. Its gender and number are determined by what it stands for. Attributive Position: An adjective in the attributive position is immediately preceded by the article. The noun may also have the article. There are three different attributive positions in all of which the adjective is preceded by the article: first attributive position, article-adjective-noun (ὁ ἀγαθός ἄνθρωπος = “the good man”); second attributive position, article-adjective-article-noun (ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἀγαθός = “the good man”); third attributive position, noun-article-adjective (ἄνθρωπος ὁ ἀγαθός = “the good man”). If the next-to-last letter in the stem of an adjective is a rho or a vowel, the feminine stem ends in alpha. All other first and second declension feminine adjectives end in eta. This is important because it will help differentiate whether an adjective ending in ας could be genitive or not. For example, the form νεκράς could be either genitive singular or accusative plural, but the form ἀγαθάς can only be accusative plural since its genitive singular must be ἀγαθῆς due to the theta in the stem. Ref-0085, p. 68.

Greek grammar - adjectives - declension : ☪ + Adjectives fall into four basic categories depending on which declension they follow and whether the feminine and masculine forms are the same or different (the masculine and neuter always follow the same declension). The declension number for masculine/feminine/neuter is as follows: 2-1-2, 3-1-3, 2-2, 3-3. This could be further simplified by recognizing that masculine === neuter and only designating where there is a difference between masculine/neuter and feminine: 2-1, 3-1, 2, 3. Ref-0085, p. 81.

Greek grammar - allos vs. heteros : Gal. 1:6-7 ☪ + “Koine was a simplified form of classical Greek and unfortunately many of the subtleties of classical Greek were lost. For example, in classical Greek ἄλλος meant ‘other’ of the same kind while ἕτερος meant ‘other’ of a different kind. . . . Some of these subtleties come through in Scripture but not often.” Ref-0085, p. 1. “There are two words in Greek, each meaning another, ἕτερος and ἄλλος, ἕτερος means another of a different kind, ἄλλος, another of the same kind. ἕτερος denotes qualitative difference; ἄλλος, numerical difference. ἕτερος distinguishes one of two; ἄλλος, adds one besides. ἕτερος involves the idea of difference of kind whereas ἄλλος denotes simply distinction of individuals.” Ref-0946, p. 72.

Greek grammar - anarthrous : ☪ + “Greek grammarians uses the term arthron ‘joint’ for ‘connecting word,’ particularly for the article. In modern usage, an arthrous noun has the article, an anarthrous noun lacks it.” Ref-0157, p. 236n3. “The definite article in Greek is extraordinarily difficult to classify exhaustively. I suspect that some uses are determined more by the “feel” of the speaker or writer of the language than by unambiguous principles. Nevertheless, some guiding principles exist; and many errors are made by those who ignore them or fail to understand them. In particular, it is a fallacy to suppose that because the Greek text has an article, the English translation must have one, or because the Greek text is anarthrous at some point, the English translation must follow suit. Unlike English, Greek has no indefinite article; and its definite article often has functions widely different from the use in English of either the definite or the indefinite article.” Ref-0698, p. 79.

Greek grammar - aorist tense : ☪ + “The aorist tense ‘presents an occurrence in summary, viewed as a whole from the outside, without regard for the internal make-up of the occurrence.’ This contrasts with the present and imperfect, which portray the action as an ongoing process. It may be helpful to think of the aorist as taking a snapshot of the action while the imperfect (like the present) takes a motion picture, portraying the action as it unfolds. . . . The snapshot by itself cannot tell if the action was momentary, ‘once-for-all’, repeated, at regularly repeating intervals, or over a long time. . . . In the indicative, the aorist usually indicates past time with reference to the time of speaking (thus, ‘absolute time’). Aorist participles usually suggest antecedent time to that of the main verb (i.e., past time in a relative sense). There are exceptions to this general principle. . . . Outside of the indicative and participle, time is not a feature of the aorist.” Ref-0129, pp. 554-555. “It is true that the aorist may, under certain circumstances, describe an event that is, in reality, momentary. But we run into danger when we say that this is the aorist’s unaffected meaning, for then we force it on the text in an artificial way. We then tend to ignore such aorists that disprove our view (and they can be found in every chapter of the NT) and proclaim loudly the ‘once-for-all’ aorists when they suit us.” Ref-0129, p. 557. The aorist views a parade from the vantage-point of a blimp overhead -- seeing the entire event from an external view. The imperfect and present view the same parade from curbside on the street -- watching as the parade passes from an internal point of view. “6. Generally, the aorist looks at an action as a whole and does not tell us anything about the precise nature of the action (constative). This does not mean that the action was not a process; the writer simply does not tell us. . . . 7. Other times the aorist places emphasis on the beginning of an action (ingressive). . . . 8. The aorist can be used to describe a timeless truth (gnomic). . . . These are often translated into English with the present tense. . . . 9. Because time is secondary to aspect, the Greek speaker can even use the aorist to describe an action that will occur in the future (proleptic). This stresses the certainty that the event will occur. . . . One of the primary areas of confusion in Greek exegesis comes when people confuse the Greek aorist with the English punctiliar aspect. . . . However, the Greek aorist is not necessarily punctiliar. It tells you nothing about the action of the verb other than it happened.” Ref-0221, pp. 160-161. “The aorist, after all, is well-named: it is aorist, without a place, undefined. It simply refers to the action itself without specifying whether the action is unique, repeated, ingressive, instantaneous, past, or accomplished. The best grammarians understood this well, and used the term punctiliar much the way a mathematician uses the term point in geometry -- to refer to a location without magnitude. But just as the mathematical notion is not intuitively obvious, so also has the notion of punctiliar action been a stumbling block to many interpreters. Stagg provided many examples of grammarians and commentators who insist, for instance, that the phrase all sinned (ἡμαρτον [hēmarton]) in Romans 5:12 must indicate a once-for-all action, presumably when Adam sinned; that the presentation of the body in Romans 12:1 is a once-for-all commitment; that the repentance noted in Revelation 3:19 must be once-for-all action because the verbal form is μετανόησον (metanoōson); that the aorist ἐτύθη (etuthē) in 1 Corinthians 5:7 (“for Christ our passover lamb was sacrificed”) means that Christ’s atoning death is a completed, once-for-all event; and so forth. And if grammarians and commentators draw such conclusions, who can blame the busy pastor for trading on the aorist to gain theological capital? Stagg proceeded to give numerous counterexamples, a few of which I now pass on: . . . Stagg recognized, of course, that the presence of an aorist verb does not mean the action is not once-for-all or located in past time or temporally punctiliar. When we read that Sapphira fell ἔπεσεν (epesen) at Peter’s feet, the context makes it clear that her falling was as “instantaneous” an action as that kind can ever be. Similarly, there may be contextual reasons for thinking that all persons did in fact die when Adam committed his first sin (see Rom. 5:12); it is just that the aorist verb ἡμαρτον (hēmarton) does not prove it. No believer doubts that Christ was sacrificed once only (1 Cor. 5:7), since after all some passages explicitly affirm this (e.g., Heb. 10:12); but this theological conclusion, as important as it is, derives no sure support from the presence of an aorist verb.” Ref-0698, pp. 68-69. “. . . often aorist action is not punctiliar.” Ref-0774, p. 28

Greek grammar - aorist tense - continuous action? : Rev. 2:25 ☩ + “Hold fast,” in Rev. 2:25 is an aorist imperative, κρατήσατε, but would seem to imply continuous action.

Greek grammar - aorist tense - imperative : Rom. 6:13 ☩ + “Beware that the imperative mood is regularly mishandled by exegetes. At one time it was customary to take the present imperative to mean “keep on doing/stop doing” while the aorist imperative supposedly meant “start/don’t start doing.” This has proven to be untenable. Today it is understood that the aorist imperative in Rom. 6:13 . . . should NOT be rendered as “start presenting yourselves to God,” implying that they are not doing so now. The aorist tense is not proof of their lack of commitment!” Ref-0352.

Greek grammar - apposition : ☩ + “An appositional construction involves two adjacent substantives that refer to the same person or thing and have the same syntactical relation to the rest of the clause. The second substantive is said to be in apposition to the first. Normally, both substantives will be in the same case (whether it is nom., voc., gen., dat., or acc.)” Ref-0129, p. 62. “Apposition is a method of expressing the phrase “that is to say” without writing it, but “apposing” a second word with a case-ending to the first word with the same case-ending.” Edwin A. Abbott, Johannine Grammar (London: Adam and Charles Black, 1906), 37.

Greek grammar - article : ☩ + “It is vital to bear in mind that we cannot determine the English translation by the presence or absence of the article in Greek. Sometimes we will use the article in English when it is not used in Greek, and sometimes the force of the Greek article may best be rendered by an anarthrous English noun. The best rule in this matter, once again, is common sense.”

Ref-0133, p. 80. “You will soon discover that the Greeks do not use the article the same way we do. They use it when we never would, and they omit it when English demands it. . . .

Names. Greek often uses the definite article before a proper name. For example, you will often find ὁ θεός (the God) or ὁ Ἰησοῦς (the Jesus). You may omit the article in your translation of proper names. Abstract nouns. Greek often includes the article with abstract nouns such as “The Truth” (ἡ ἀληθεία), although English does not normally use the article.” Ref-0085, pp. 39-40. “The presence and the absence of the article must be carefully noted by the Greek student. The presence of the article identifies. The absence of the article qualifies. That is, when the article is used, the emphasis is upon particular identity, individuality, even uniqueness in some contexts, and upon contrast. When the article is not used, the emphasis is upon the quality or character of the person or thing designated by the noun. The articular noun identifies. The anarthrous noun qualifies.”

Ref-0946, pp. 15-16. “One of the uses of the Greek article is to denote previous reference. For instance, the Samaritan woman asks our Lord, πόθεν οὖν ἔχεις τὸ ζῶν; (John 4:11). The article is used with the words “water” and “living.” Her question was, “From whence then do you have that water, that living water to which you just made reference?”” Ref-0946, p. 17. “Or, take the statement, “God is love” (1 John 4:8). That simply is not true. The rule of syntax in a case like this is that, when the article is used with the predicate, it shows the essential identity of the predicate with the subject. For instance, ἡ ἁμαρτία ἐστὶν ἡ ἀνομία (1 John 3:4), makes sin identical with lawlessness. They are of the same essence. But the expression, “God is love” is ὁ θεός ἀγάπη ἐστὶν (1 John 4:8). The word in the predicate is anarthrous. That means that quality, character, or nature are stressed. The idea is “God as to His nature is love.” The subject and the predicate are not in this case essentially identical. God is a person, infinite, eternal, omniscient, omnipresent, and omnipotent in His being. He has a nature that is loving.” Ref-0946, pp. 18-19. “When the article is repeated with some word or phrase that modifies the noun, we have a construction that is used to give emphasis to the word that modifies that noun, and the article functions as a mild relative pronoun.” Ref-0946, p. 20.

Greek grammar - article - kai : ☩ + “Young declared, “When two nouns are separated by καί and each noun has its own article, the author intends a distinction between them. When the two nouns are separated by a καί and only the first has the article, the author intends of the reader to group the two nouns together in some fashion.” [Richard A. Young, Intermediate New Testament Greek: A Linguistic and Exegetical Approach (Nashville: Broadman & Holman, 1994), 62.] In the interest of fairness, it should be noted that not everyone holds this view.” Bruce A.

Baker, The Two Peoples of God in 2 Thessalonians 1:10, Ref-0785, Volume 13 Number 38 April 2009, 5:42, p. 27.

Greek grammar - aspect : ☩ + “The basic genius of the Greek verb is not its ability to indicate when the action of the verb occurs (time), but what type of action it describes, or what we call “aspect.” . . . In Greek, there are three aspects. The continuous aspect means that the action of the verb is thought of as an ongoing process. The undefined aspect means that the action of the verb is thought of as a simple event, without commenting on whether or not it is a process. . . . If you want to get very specific, the Greek undefined aspect does not describe what actually happened. It describes how the writer chooses to tell you about the action. . . . The perfect aspect describes an action that was brought to completion but has effects carrying into the present.” Ref-0085, pp. 118, 119n3. “Linguists use the term tense to refer to the time a verb takes place in relation to the time of speaking or writing. . . . The term aspect is used to describe the internal time nature of the even or action; whether it is seen as completed or ongoing. Thomas Payne explains ten potential aspects: perfective, imperfective, perfect, pluperfect, completive, inceptive, continuative/progressive, punctual, iterative, and habitual. Outside of linguistic writing, some of these terms are treated as tense rather than aspect.” Ref-1162, pp. 90-91. “There are three verbal aspects in Greek, linked to the three major tense-forms.2 a. Perfective aspect is the meaning (?semantics’) of the aorist tense: the action is conceived of by the language user as a complete and undifferentiated process. This is regardless of how in actual fact the action occurs, that is, whether it is momentary or lasts a significant length of time. . . b. Imperfective aspect is the meaning of the present tense, including the so-called imperfect form (augmented present form with secondary endings): the action is conceived of by the language user as being in progress. In other words, its internal structure is seen as unfolding. c. Stative aspect is the meaning of the perfect tense, including the so-called pluperfect form (not always augmented but with secondary endings): the action is conceived of by the language user as reflecting a given (often complex) state of affairs. This is regardless of whether this state of affairs has come about as the result of some antecedent action or whether any continued duration is implied.” Ref-0774, pp. 21-22 “Modern linguistics has made students of language aware that language production may usefully be discussed in terms of its opposing choices, so that it is seen in terms of a coordinated system. This implies that when one element is selected, other similar elements in the language are not selected. The perfective (aorist) aspect is the least heavily weighted of the Greek verbal aspects, and hence carries the least significant meaning attached to use of the form. In Greek the aorist is what some have called the ‘default’ tense; that is, it is the tense chosen when there is no reason to choose another. The imperfective (present/imperfect) aspect is more heavily weighted, and to use it in opposition to the perfective (aorist) implies greater semantic significance.” Ref-0774, pp. 22-23 “Temporal values (past, present, future) are not established in Greek by use of the verbal aspects (or tense-forms) alone. This may come as a surprise to those who, like most students of Greek, were taught at an elementary level that certain tense-forms automatically refer to certain times when an action occurs. The usual equation, called 'absolute tense', states that the aorist, imperfect and pluperfect tenses convey the idea of past time; the present and perfect tenses that of present time; and the future tense that of future time. This is not the place to argue against the absolute tense conception in detail, although subsequent discussion in this and other chapters will illustrate some of the crucial issues in its refutation. I do not mean to say that Greeks did not have a means of conveying when an event might have occurred, however. A more viable category is 'relative tense'. This presupposes that in Greek the temporal ordering of events is not measured in relation to a fixed point (absolute time), but by the relations established among the involved events with regard to each other and to the context. This relating is achieved by a variety of indicators available in the language In other words, elements other than verbal aspect (context, for example) are the primary conveyors of temporal information in Greek." Ref-0774, pp. 25-26 "in Greek the temporal ordering of events is not measured in relation to a fixed point (absolute time), but by the relations established among the involved events with regard to each other and to the context. This relating is achieved by a variety of indicators available in the language (e.g. use of temporal adverbs, such as νῦν, τότε). In other words, elements other than verbal aspect (context, for example) are the primary conveyors of temporal information in Greek." Ref-0774, p. 25

Greek grammar - aspect vs. Aktionsart : ☉ + "This is the difference between aspect and Aktionsart. Aspect is the basic meaning of the tense unaffected by considerations in a given utterance, while Aktionsart is the meaning of the tense as used by an author in a particular utterance, affected as it were by other features of the language." Ref-0129, p. 556.

Greek grammar - case - 5 vs. 8 : ☉ "It is assumed that the Greek student has a good grammar dealing with the elements of Greek. One that presents eight cases in Greek rather than five, is to be preferred, since it more sharply defines the delicate distinctions between some of the cases. Case is not a matter of form, but of function. For instance, although the genitive and ablative cases have the same case ending, yet they have quite different functions. The genitive is the specifying case, the ablative, the whence case. The former describes, whereas the latter shows source, and speaks of separation. While the case ending of the locative, instrumental, and dative cases is the same, yet the locative is the case of location, specifying the location within which the action of the verb takes place, the instrumental is the case of means or association, designating the instrument by which the action of the verb is accomplished, and the dative is the case of personal interest, designating the person or thing in whose interest the action of the verb is performed. Excellent grammars that present the eight cases are Beginner's Grammar of the Greek New Testament by William Hersey

Davis and Essentials of New Testament Greek by Ray Summers." Ref-0946, pp. 127-128. "The new historico-scientific method by which Greek has been studied in recent years has discovered that the language has eight cases: nominative, vocative, genitive, ablative, dative, locative, instrumental, and accusative. Ordinarily we find only four inflectional endings. The first usually embraces the nominative and vocative; the second, the genitive and ablative; the third, the dative, locative, and instrumental; the fourth, the accusative. The student should be careful to bear in mind that these inflectional endings do not decide the question of case." Ref-0957, p. 33. See also Greek grammar - declension. Dana and Mantey develop case as ". . . the expression of a thought the noun may bear various relations to the rest of the sentence." Ref-0957, p. 62. Therefore, they recognize an 8-case system based on function rather than a more limited 5-case system based upon form. "There are two reasons for concluding that we properly have eight cases in Greek. The first intimation of the fact was obtained from investigation of the Sanskrit, which exhibits eight case forms. When the Greek cases were studied in the light of these eight Sanskrit cases, it was discovered that the same general distinctions prevailed. This sound method of comparative philology has brought the twentieth century Greek grammarian to recognize that there are eight cases in Greek instead of five. In addition to the process of comparative investigation, this conclusion is also based upon the very obvious fact that case is a matter of function rather than of form. The case of the Greek noun is to be determined by its relation to the rest of the sentence." Ref-0957, p. 65. "The dative, locative, and instrumental cases are all represented by the same inflectional form, but the distinction in function is very clear--much more so than the distinction between the ablative and genitive. Recent grammarians nearly all recognize this distinction, and even those of the previous century have discerned it. . . . If case is determined by function, then there can be no question that the third inflectional form of the Greek noun includes three cases, the dative, locative, and instrumental. . . . On the question of the syncretism of the dative case with the locative and instrumental, Robertson observes that the distinction is much more pronounced than that between the genitive and ablative." Ref-0957, pp. 83-85.

Greek grammar - cases : ☉ "As a noun is commonly used in Greek it exhibits the following uses: (1) Its primary and typical use is to designate an object of consciousness, concerning which the assertion contained in the predicate is made; i.e., the function of subject. This function we call the Nominative case. (2) A noun is sometimes used without specific grammatical relations, simply as the object of address, which use we call the Vocative case. (3) One noun may be used to define the character or relations of another, which function we describe as the Genitive case. (4) A noun may be used to denote a point of departure, in a thought of removal or derivation, for which the Ablative case is used. (5) A noun may be used to indicate an object of interest or reference, which function we call the Dative case. (6) A noun may be used to indicate the position of an object or action, for which the Locative case is used. (7) Sometimes a noun denotes the means described in an expression of thought. Such use we call the Instrumental case. (8) A noun may be used in some way to limit an assertion, which function we describe as the Accusative case. These eight functions define the root idea of the eight cases. For the eight cases we ordinarily find only four inflectional endings, with occasionally a separate form for the Vocative." Ref-0957, p. 66. "In Greek the verb expresses its own subject, as ἐκήρυξεν means he preached. Consequently when we express a noun subject of the verb, it is in apposition with the subject implied in the verb itself. Thus ὁ Παῦλος ἐκήρυξεν really means, he preached, that is, Paul. Therefore, the nominative is more than the case of the subject: it is the case of specific designation, and is in appositional relationship." Ref-0957, p. 69. "The vocative is hardly to be regarded as a case. . . . We may safely follow Robertson in his conclusion that "in reality it is not a case at all. Practically it has to be treated as a case, though technically it is not. . . ." Ref-0957, p. 72. "The ablative and genitive have been confused by nearly all Greek grammarians, both classical and New Testament. . . . Robertson takes a positive stand for the ablative as a distinct case. Moulton recognizes the distinction, but gives little prominence to it. Nunn acknowledges that the ablative is a distinct case from the genitive, but does not distinguish its uses, because he wishes "to avoid conflicting with established usage" (Syntax of N. T. Greek, p. 42)." Ref-0957, p. 83. "The accusative signifies that the object referred to is considered as the point toward which something is proceeding: that it is the end of the action or motion described, or the space traversed in such motion or direction" (Webster: Syntax and Synonyms of the Greek Testament, p. 63)." Greek grammar - consonants : ☉ + "The consonants may be classified as follows: | a. Liquids: λ, μ, ν, ρ. | b1. Mute Gutturals: smooth (κ), middle (γ), rough (χ). | b2. Mute Labials: smooth (π), middle (β), rough (φ). | b3. Mute Dentals: smooth (τ), middle (δ), rough (θ). | c. Sibilants: ζ, ξ, σ, ψ." Ref-0957, p. 21.

Greek grammar - contract verbs : ☉ + "Contract verbs are verbs whose stems end in alpha, epsilon, or omicron. That final vowel is called the "contract vowel." . . . When that final stem vowel comes into contact with the connecting vowel, the two vowels contract. The two vowels join and often form a different vowel or a diphthong. . . . We meet contractions only in two tenses, the present and the imperfect . . . In the other tenses the vowel lengthens and there is no contraction . . ." Ref-0085, p. 134-135. "There will always be a circumflex over the contracted vowels in the present active indicative." ου is formed by εο, οε, and οο. ει is formed by εε. ω is formed from almost any combination of omicron or omega with any other vowel, except for when they form ου (above). α is formed from αε. η is formed from εα. οι is formed from οει. Diphthongs: if the contract vowel and the first vowel of the diphthong are the same, they simplify. If they differ, they contract. If the second vowel of the diphthong is an iota, it subscript if possible, if it is upsilon it drops off. Contract verbs contract as if the personal endings are those visible in the present active indicative, but the lexical form shows the contract vowel (e.g., ἀγαπάω) which won't actually appear when the verb is used in the text (this is why it is important to be able to surmise the pre-contracted vowel so as to look up the form in a lexicon). In the first person singular, no personal ending is used so the connecting vowel lengthens to omega.

Ref-0085, p. 138-139. In the future tense, when the contract vowel is immediately followed by the tense formative σ, the contract vowel lengthens before the tense formative. Alpha and epsilon both lengthen to eta while omicron lengthens to omega (αγατα + σ + ω --> ἀγαπήσω; πληρο + σ + ω --> πληρώσω). Notice that the accent is always over the lengthened contract vowel. Ref-0085, p. 155.

Greek grammar - contraction - nu : ☪ + See Ref-0957, pp. 24-25.

Greek grammar - crasis : ☪ + "Crisis is the merging of a word into the one following by the omission and contraction of vowels . . . e.g., κἀγὼ for καὶ ἐγώ . . . Crasis is rare in the New Testament." Ref-0957, p. 23.

Greek grammar - dative - case : Greek grammar - cases ☆

Greek grammar - dative case : ☪ + "In Greek, the indirect object is put in the dative case. . . . The key word for the dative is "to." . . . Iota is the dative singular case ending and ις is the dative plural. In the singular, the final stem vowel lengthens and the iota subscript. Because alpha lengthens to long alpha, and eta is already long, you do not see the lengthening in the first declension; but it is visible in the second declension because omicron lengthens to omega. | Βασιλεία + ι --> Βασιλεία | ἀγαπή + ι --> ἀάπη | λογο + ι --> λογοι --> λογωί --> λόω" Ref-0085, p. 47. ". . . if the word is in the genitive or dative because it is the object of a preposition, do not use the key word." Ref-0085, p. 57.

Greek grammar - declension : ☪ + "In Greek there are three basic inflectional patterns what a word can follow. Each of these patterns is called a "declension." . . . which pattern a word follows has no effect on its meaning, only its form. Some word in Greek are indeclinable, such as personal names and words borrowed from other languages. Their form, therefore, does not change regardless of their meaning or function in the sentence." Ref-0085, p. 25.

"The different declensions affect only the form of the case ending. * Nouns that have a stem ending in an alpha or eta are first declension, take first declension endings, and are primarily feminine (e.g., γραφή). * Nouns that have a stem ending in an omicron are second declension, take second declension endings, and are mostly masculine or neuter (ἄποστολος; ἔργον). * If the stem of the word ends in a consonant it is third declension." Ref-0085, p. 31. "Here is the rule for the alpha to eta shift. It is important. If a first declension word has a stem ending in alpha where the preceding letter is epsilon, iota, or rho, it will form the genitive and dative with alpha. Otherwise, the alpha will shift to eta."

Ref-0085, p. 61. "Note that the iota does not subscript in the third declension as it does in the first and second. This is because iota can subscript only under a vowel." Ref-0085, p. 75. "Declension is the inflection of a substantive (noun, adjective, pronoun, or participle) for the purpose of indicating its relation to the rest of the sentence. . . . inflection was originally the sole means of expression case relations. Later the preposition began to do service in this capacity, and gradually encroached upon the inflectional endings until in modern speech declension has almost disappeared. Let it be remembered that inflection did not arise as determining case, but for the purpose of indicating case. The case was determined by considerations of use. Declension, then, is a matter of form; case is a matter of function. Case is determined by the relations of the substantive in the grammatical structure of the sentence. Declension was developed as a means of indicating such substantive relations. Hence, it may be seen that, without question, the case of a noun is to be decided, not by its inflectional form, but by the grammatical relations which it sustains. . . .

The above consideration will enable the student to understand why we speak of more cases than a noun has inflectional endings. A single inflectional ending may do service for several cases. This is already a familiar phenomenon to the Greek student; as, for instance, the nominative, vocative, and accusative of neuter nouns, where we have three cases represented by one inflectional ending. Therefore, it is not possible to deny that there may be more than one case represented by a single inflectional ending in other instances." Ref-0957, pp. 32-33. "It is best to divide Greek language into three declensions, on the basis of the ending of the noun stem. Nouns which have α as their characteristic stem ending are assigned to the first declension. Those with ο as the characteristic stem ending are in the second declension. The third declension includes nouns whose stems end in a consonant, or in ι, υ, or ω. The third declension is to be determined by observing both the stem ending and the inflectional endings, which are distinctive for this declension. The variation in the stem ending of third-declension nouns has occasioned some difference of opinion as to the number of Greek declensions, but there is general agreement upon the three we have mentioned." Ref-0957, p. 35.

Greek grammar - declension - first : ☪ + "The nouns of this declension are usually feminine, though a few are masculine. The stem ends in α, but this α is frequently found in contract or modified form. The forms vary with different kinds of stems. These variations are seen in the singular only, the plural being the same for all nouns of this declension. (1) When the stem ending is preceded by ε, ι, or ρ, the α is retained throughout. (2) When the stem ending is preceded by σ, λ, λλ, or a double consonant, the vowel is generally short α, which becomes η in the genitive and dative singular. (3) After other consonants the stem ending is usually η. (4) The regular masculine ending for nouns of this declension is ης. (5) After ε, ι, or ρ masculine nouns have -ας after the analogy of feminine nouns." Ref-0957, pp. 35-36.

Greek grammar - declension - third : ☪ + "Because the stem of a third declension noun ends in a consonant, when you add a case ending that begins with a sigma, the final stem consonant and the sigma often change to some other letter, or the consonant drops out, thus hiding the true stem and the true case ending. . . . σαρκ + σ --> σάρξ . . . Because of the changes that take place in the nominative singular, it is often difficult to determine the stem of a third declension noun. The solution to this problem is always to memorize the genitive singular form with the lexical form. If you drop the genitive singular case ending, you will always have the word's stem." Ref-0085, p. 72.

Greek grammar - deponent verbs : ☪ + "The simplest procedure is to consider a middle (or passive) to be deponent if the lexical form for the word in BAGD is middle (or passive), not active. The problem with this approach is that BAGD frequently lists as the lexical form of a word the only form that occurs in biblical and early patristic literature, even though in a wider context the active is used. Thus, for example, εκλεγομαι is the lexical form for a verb that appears as an active in Hellenistic literature. BAGD's note here, as often, should tip the student off that all is not as it appears: 'the act. does not occur in our lit.' When an exegetical decision depends in part on the voice of the verb, a more rigorous approach is required. In such cases, you should investigate the form of the word in Koine (conveniently, via Moulton-Milligan) and classical Greek (Liddell-Scott-Jones) before you declare a verb deponent. Even then you should not be able to see a middle force to the verb." Ref-0129, pp. 429-430. "A deponent verb is one that is [middle or] passive in its form but active in its meaning. Its form is always passive but its meaning is always active. It can never have a passive meaning. Most tools will list these forms as 'passive' and not 'deponent' verbs. . . . How then will you know how they are to be translated? . . . Actually, it is quite easy. Nondeponent verbs have lexical forms ending in ω or υι (λύω, διδωμι). But if the lexical form of the word ends in ομαι, it is deponent in the present tense. Deponent verbs become a little more complicated than this . . . Just because a word is deponent in the present does not mean it is deponent in other tenses. Likewise, a verb can be nondeponent in the present but deponent in other tenses. . . . About 75 percent . . . of all middles are deponent." Ref-0221, pp. 147-148. You can look at the verb in the lexicon, and if the second form listed ends in -ομαι, then it is deponent in the future. Ref-0085, p. 157.

Greek grammar - diaeresis : ☪ + "In some words we find two vowels that normally form a diphthong, but in this case do not. To show that these two vowels are pronounced as two separate sounds, a diaeresis (a superscripted pair of dots) is placed over the second vowel. . . . [indicate] it forms two separate sounds." It is marked by an apostrophe, which is placed where the vowel was dropped (e.g., απο εμου becomes απ' εμου)." Ref-0085, p. 14.

Greek grammar - emphasis : ☩ + Placement at the beginning of a sentence carries the greatest emphasis, placement at the end the secondary position of emphasis.

Greek grammar - exceptions : ☩ + "Too often the rule has been drawn from a limited range of facts. What is afterwards found to conflict with a rule is called an "exception." Soon the exceptions equal or surpass the rule." Ref-1236, p. 8.

Greek grammar - feminine stems : ☩ + "All first and second declension feminine nouns that have eta in the singular shift to alpha in the plural." Ref-0085, p. 36.

Greek grammar - future tense : ☩ + "As a general rule, the future is translated with the undefined aspect (?I will eat') rather than the continuous (?I will be eating'). Uses of the Future: 1. something that will happen in the future predictive . . . 2. As in English, the Greek future can express a command (imperative) . . . 3. The future can also state that a generic event will occur. It does not say that a particular occurrence is in mind, but that such events do occur (gnomic) . . . 'Man shall not live by bread alone.'" Ref-0221, pp. 155-156.

Greek grammar - gender : ☩ + "The distinctions of gender are strictly adhered to in the Greek New Testament. It is to be carefully observed that there is not only "sense gender"--that which is relative to actual sex--but "grammatical gender"--that which is determined purely by grammatical usage." Ref-0957, pp. 34-35. "It is to be observed that the article is an unfailing means for determining the gender of substantives (see Paradigm 5)." Ref-0957, p. 39.

Greek grammar - genitive - case : Greek grammar - cases☆

Greek grammar - genitive absolute : ☩ + The participle and noun or pronoun connected with it are put into genitive case when the subject of the main verb is different from the noun or pronoun used with the participle. The participle is therefore 'absolute,' i.e., loosed or separated from the main part of the sentence and, hence, in the genitive case. Example: ειποντων ταυτα των μαθητων οι αποστολοι απηλθον. 'The disciples having said these things (genitive case), the apostles went away.' "The genitive absolute is a noun or pronoun and a participle in the genitive that are not grammatically connected to the rest of the sentence. In other words, there will be no word in the remaining part of the sentence that the noun, pronoun, or participle modifies." Ref-0221, p. 183.

Greek grammar - genitive case : ☩ + "The genitive case in Greek is the same as the possessive case in English. . . . ν is a genitive singular ending and ων is a genitive plural ending [the final stem vowel is absorbed by the omega . . . λογο + ων --> λόγων]. . . . The key word for the genitive is "of.""Ref-0085, pp.

46-47. ". . . if the word is in the genitive or dative because it is the object of a preposition, do not use the key word." Ref-0085, p. 57.

Greek grammar - Granville Sharp rule : Tit. 2:13; 2Pe. 1:1 ☩ + "The Granville Sharp Rule states that if a single article links two or more singular substantives, the second and subsequent substantives further describe the first. [emphasis mine]." Ref-0133, p. 80. "This rule states that if you have two nouns, the first with an article before it, the second without, and they are connected by the word 'and,' both nouns are describing the same person. . . . Since this rule was recognized as being valid for the Greek language after the translation of the King James Version, those translators did not follow the rule. . . . it's not that the translation is wrong. It's just not as clear as it could be. One could misconstrue the text to be differentiating between the terms 'God' and 'Savior.' But when Granville Sharp's rule is taken into account, the rendering is much clearer: 'Looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of our great God and Savior, Jesus Christ.'" Ref-0093, p. 84. "Yet four lesser known stipulations of Sharp's rule are often overlooked. These must be met if the two nouns in the construction are to be referred to the same person. The four are (1) both nouns must be personal; (2) both nouns must be common nouns, that is, not proper names; (3) both nouns must be in the same case; and (4) both nouns must be in the singular. . . . On the basis of an extensive analysis of plural nouns in comparable constructions in the NT, Wallace has confirmed that plural nouns are an exception to Sharp's rule. . . . Wallace affirms the validity of the rule for plural adjectives or participles, but indicates he has found no clear instances of the rule's applicability to plural nouns in the NT Koine, Papyri, Hellenistic, or Classical Greek." Farnell, David F., "Fallible New Testament Prophecy/Prophets? A Critique of Wayne Grudem's Hypothesis," Ref-0164. "The rule is as follows: When the copulative kai connects two nouns of the same case, [vis. nouns (either substantive or adjective, or participles) of personal description, respecting office, dignity, affinity, or connexion, and attributes, properties, or qualities, good or ill], if the article ο, or any of its cases, precedes the first of the said nouns or participles, and is not repeated before the second noun or participle, the latter always relates to the same person that is expressed or described by the first noun or participle (i.e. it denotes a farther description of the first-named person. . .) In other words, in the TSKS [article-substantive-kai-substantive] construction, the second noun refers to the same person mentioned with the first noun when: (1) neither is impersonal; (2) neither is plural; (3) neither is a proper name. Therefore, according to Sharp, the rule applied absolutely only with personal, singular, and non-proper nouns. The significance of these requirements can hardly be overestimated, for those who have misunderstood Sharp's principle have done so almost without exception because they were unaware of the restrictions that Sharp set forth." Ref-0129, pp. 271-272 "It has frequently been alleged that θεος is a proper name and, hence, that Sharp's rule cannot apply to constructions in which it is employed. We have already argued that θεος is not a proper name in Greek." Ref-0129, p. 276.

"The initial fallacy is in formulating the Granville Sharp rule with less care than Granville Sharp did. Sharp's rule is in fact quite complex, too complex to analyze here." Ref-0698, p. 81.

Greek grammar - historical present tense : Rom. 7:14-25 ☩ + "To argue. . . that the first person present tense verbs in Rom. 7:14-25 are historical presents ignores the semantic pattern of this category of usage: of the hundreds of undisputed historical presents in the NT, all are in the third person." Ref-0129, p. 2.

Greek grammar - history : ☩ "It will be of service to present a brief outline of the history of the Greek tongue. And yet it is not easy to give. See the discussion by Sophocles in his Greek Lexicon (p. 11 f.), inadequate in view of recent discoveries by Schliemann and Evans. The following is a tentative outline: The Mycenaean Age, 1500 b.c. to 1000 b.c.; the Age of the Dialects, 1000 b.c. to 300 b.c.; the Age of the Κοινή, 300 b.c. to 330 a.d.; the Byzantine Greek, 330 a.d. to 1453 a.d.; the modern Greek, 1453 a.d. to the present time. The early stage of the Byzantine Greek (up to 600 a.d.) is really Κοινή and the rest is modern Greek." Ref-1236, pp. 42-43.

Greek grammar - imperfect tense : ☩ + "1. Generally, the imperfect describes an ongoing action that happened in the past (progressive, durative). . . . 2. It can also place emphasis on the beginning of the action (ingressive, inceptive). . . . 3. Some continuous actions do not occur constantly, but rather repetitively (iterative). . . . 4. Other actions occur regularly, such as expressed by the English 'used to' (customary). . . . 5. The imperfect can also describe what a person wishes to do (voluntative), tries to do (conative), or almost does (tendential)." Ref-0221, pp. 158-159.

Greek grammar - improper diphthong : ☩ + "An improper diphthong is made up of a vowel and an iota subscript. An iota subscript is a small iota written under the vowels α, η, ω and normally is the last letter in a word. This iota has no effect on the pronunciation but is essential for translation. . . ." Ref-0085, p. 10.

Greek grammar - instrumental - case : Greek grammar - cases☆

Greek grammar - iota - consonantal : ☩ + "A consonantal iota looks just like an iota. However, before the New Testament times it was a different character in the alphabet. It dropped out and the vowel iota took over some of its functions. This is worth noting because iotas will not always behave in a regular fashion. . . . It is called a consonantal iota because the old character shared the characteristics of both a vowel and a consonant." Ref-0085, p. 75.

Greek grammar - iota subscript : ☩ + "An improper diphthong is a diphthong with an iota subscript under the vowel. The iota subscript does not affect pronunciation but is important in translation." Ref-0085, p. 11. "In the dative an iota is always present for all three genders. In the singular it is subscripted." Ref-0085, p. 49. "A vowel can subscript only under a long vowel." Ref-0085, p. 50. "The iota subscript with α, η, and ω is a sort of diphthong, though it in now way modifies the sound." Ref-0957, pp. 21-22.

Greek grammar - koine : ☩ + "With great ability Moulton took the cue from Deissmann and used the papyri for grammatical purposes. He demonstrated that the Greek of the N. T. is in the main just the vernacular "koinhv" of the papyri." Ref-1236, p. 6. "What is called ἡ κοινή was a world-speech, not merely a general Greek tongue among the Greek tribes as was true of the Achaen-Dorian and the Attic. It is not speculation to speak of the κοινή as a world-speech, for the inscriptions in the κοινή testify to its spread over Asia, Egypt, Greece, Italy, Sicily and the isles of the sea, not to mention the papyri. Marseilles was a great centre of Greek civilization, and even Cyrene, though not Carthage, was Grecized. The κοινή was in such general use that the Roman Senate and imperial governors had the decrees translated into the world-language and scattered over the empire.² It is significant that the Greek speech becomes one instead of many dialects at the very time that the Roman rule sweeps over the world.³ The language spread by Alexander's army over the Eastern world persisted after the division of the kingdom and penetrated all parts of the Roman world, even Rome itself." Ref-1236, pp. 53-55. " But the new point, now obvious to every one, is just this, that the N. T. is in the normal ἰσὶ ἡμίλει of the period. That is what one would have looked for, when you come to think of it. And yet that is a recent discovery, for the Purists held that the N. T. was in pure Attic, while the Hebraists explained every peculiarity as a Hebraism. The Purists felt that revelation could only come in the "best" Greek, and hence it had to be in the Attic. This, as we now know, could only have been true if the N. T. writers had been Atticistic and artificial stylists. So the Hebraists got the better of the argument and then overdid it." Ref-1236, p. 76. "It is not a peculiar type of Greek except so far as that is due to the historical conditions, the message of Christianity, and the peculiarities of the writers." Ref-1236, p. 78. "As Moulton puts it, "the Holy Ghost spoke absolutely in the language of the people."" Ref-1236, p. 80. "It is to be said for Mahaffy, however, that he changed his mind, for he later¹ wrote: "They write a dialect simple and rude in comparison with Attic Greek; they use forms which shock the purists who examine for Cambridge scholarships. But did any men ever tell a great story with more simplicity, with more directness, with more power?â€¦Believe me against all the pedants of the world, the dialect that tells such a story is no poor language, but the outcome of a great and a fruitful education."" Ref-1236, p. 84.

Greek grammar - koine - Semitic influence :

☉ + "It is interesting to take a portion of 1 Maccabees as we have it translated from the Hebrew original and compare it with the corresponding portion of Josephus. The Greek of 1 Macc. is, like the LXX, translation Greek and intensely Hebraistic, while Josephus smooths out all the Hebraistic wrinkles and shifts it into the rolling periods of Thucydides." Ref-1236, pp. 87-88. "This is still the subject of keen controversy, though not in the same way that the Purists and the Hebraists debated it. Now the point is whether the N. T. Greek is wholly in the κοινή or whether there is an appreciable Semitic colouring in addition. There is something to be said on both sides of the question." Ref-1236, p. 88. "The presumption is now clearly against a Hebraism. The balance of evidence has gone over to the other side. But after all one has the conviction that the joy of new discovery has to some extent blurred the vision of Deissmann and Moulton to the remaining Hebraisms which do not indeed make Hebraic Greek or a peculiar dialect. But enough remain to be noticeable and appreciable. Some of these may vanish, like the rest, before the new knowledge." Ref-1236, pp. 90-91. "Westcott has true insight when he says of N. T. Greek: "It combines the simple directness of Hebrew thought with the precision of Greek expression. In this way the subtle delicacy of Greek expression in some sense interprets Hebrew thought." What is true of John's Gospel is true also of James. The numerous quotations both from the LXX and the Hebrew in the N. T. put beyond controversy the constant use of the O. T. in Greek on the part of the N. T. writers. Besides, with the possible exception of Luke and the author of Hebrews, they all knew and used Aramaic as well as Greek. The point is that the N. T. writers were open to Semitic influence. How great that was must be settled by the facts in the case, not by presumptions for or against." Ref-1236, pp. 91-93. "Von Soden sums up the whole matter as follows: "It was unavoidable but that the primitive Christian writers often used compulsion with the Greek tongue and offended against its genius. They wished to bring to expression things which, up to that time, were foreign to the Greek spirit and only found expression in Semitic languages. And besides, it is only natural that the phraseology of the Greek translation of the O. T., to which they were habituated from their youth, should unconsciously flow from their pens, and still more, that when their subject-matter brought them into close contact with the O. T. or when they translated from the Aramaic dialect of Palestine, their Greek should receive a foreign tinge." This by no means makes a special N. T. dialect or even Jewish-Greek, but it admits a real, though slight, Semitic influence even where it is not "translation Greek." This position is more nearly in accord with all the facts as we now know them." Ref-1236, pp. 92-93. "The Hebrew was not a living language any longer. Less than half of the O. T. quotations in the N. T. are from the Hebrew text. It was still read in most of the synagogues of Palestine and it is possible that a modernized Hebrew was in use to some extent for literary purposes.² Perhaps the Hebrew text was consulted by the N. T. writers who used it much as a modern minister refers to his Greek Testament. The reading of the Hebrew O. T. would give one dignity of style and simplicity of expression." Ref-1236, pp. 93.

Greek grammar - lexical form : ☉ + "The lexical form of a noun is its masculine nominative singular form. ἀπόστολοι, which is nominative plural, would be listed in the lexicon as ἀπόστολος." Ref-0085, p. 33. The nominative singular form is followed by letters which identify its genitive form and then the article which identifies its gender: ἀμαρτία, -ας, ἡ. Ref-0085, p. 52. ". . . any word that can occur in all three genders (such as an adjective) uses the masculine form as its lexical form. That is why the word for "good" is listed as "ἀγαθός." What follows ("ἡ, ὄν") shows the feminine and neuter forms of the word." Ref-0085, p. 68.

Greek grammar - middle voice : ☉ + "Most middles are deponent and therefore have active meanings. About 75 percent, in fact, of all middles in the New Testament are deponents. . . . Be Cautious about placing too much weight on the middle. . . . Most of the sermons I have heard that bring up the middle voice have done so incorrectly." Ref-0221, p. 148.

Greek grammar - mood - indicative : ☉ + "In the indicative mood, if the personal ending begins with mu or nu, the connecting vowel is omicron [λεγ + ο + μεν], the connecting vowel in every other case is epsilon [λεγ + ε + τε]. If no personal ending is used, the connecting vowel can be omicron or epsilon. The connecting vowels are the same for all the tenses in the indicative mood. Their purpose is to help with pronunciation. It is easier to pronounce λέγομεν than λέγμεν." Ref-0085, p. 126.

Greek grammar - moods : ☉ + "The potential moods express action which is viewed by the speaker or writer as possible, contingent upon certain conditions. These moods state the action in varying degrees from reality. . .

Indicative Mood: 'The child runs'. This is action really taking place. Subjunctive Mood: 'If the child runs, he will escape'. Here is the mood of moderate contingency, where the action is objectively possible, but not reality.

Optative Mood: 'Oh, that the child might run'. The optative is the mood of strong contingency and expresses action not taking place but which is subjectively possible. The optative is further removed from reality than the subjunctive. . . Imperative Mood: 'Run, child!' This mood expresses action which is volitionally possible and involves the exercise of the will. One person is attempting to exert influence on another to produce an action." Ref-0099, pp. 117-118. "Mood is the morphological feature of a verb that a speaker uses to portray his or her affirmation as to the certainty of the verbal action or state (whether an actuality or potentiality). The key elements in this definition are that mood (a) does not necessarily correspond to reality, (b) does not indicate even a speaker's perception of reality, but (c) does indicate a speaker's portrayal or representation." Ref-0129, p. 445. "The connecting vowels vary with the moods, and hence by some grammarians are called "mood suffixes." But this designation is not wholly accurate, because they also vary with different tenses of the same mood. It is true, however, that each mood has its distinctive set of connecting vowels, and it is by this means that we differentiate the moods. It seems most accurate to call them simply connecting vowels (or variable vowels) and to classify them according to moods. (1) In the Indicative. a. The present, imperfect, and future have ο before μ and ν, and ε elsewhere; e.g., λύ-ο-μεν, λύ-ε-τε. b. The aorist and perfect have α; e.g., εὔσ-α-μεν, λελύκ-α-τε. c. The pluperfect has ει; e.g., (ἐ)λελύκ-ει-μεν. (2) In the Subjunctive. Here we find ω before μ and ν, and η elsewhere in all tenses; e.g., λύ-η-ς, λύσ-ω-μεν. (3) In the Optative. . . . a. The present active and middle, future active and middle, perfect active, and future-perfect passive have οι; e.g., λύ-οι-μι, λψ-οί-μεν, λύσ-οι-μι, λυσ-οί-μην, λελύκ-οι-μι, λυθησ-οί-μην.

b. The aorist active and middle have αι; e.g., λύσ-αι-μι, λυσ-αι-μην. c. The aorist passive and perfect middle have ει: e.g., λυθ-εί-ην λελυμένος εί-ην. (4) In the Imperative. This follows the analogy of the indicative, except that in the perfect there is ε instead of α; e.g., λέλυκ-ε, λελυκ-έ-τω, etc. (5) In the Participle. The middle and passive participle ending μενος takes ο as a connecting vowel, except the perfect; e.g., λυ-ό-μενος, but λελυ-μένος.” Ref-0957, pp. 53-54.

Greek grammar - morpheme : ☉ + “‘morpheme’ is the smallest part of a word that conveys meaning. In the case of ἀκούόμενος, the morphemes are the stem (ἀκου), connecting vowel (ο), participle morpheme (μενο), and the case ending (σ).” Ref-0221 p. 184.

Greek grammar - noun rules : ☉ + “1. Stems ending in alpha α or eta η are in the first declension, stems ending in omicron ο are in the second, and consonantal stems are in the third. 2. Every neuter word has the same form in the nominative and accusative. 3. Almost all neuter words end in alpha in the nominative and accusative plural. 4. In the dative singular, the iota subscript is possible. 5. Vowels often change their length (“ablaut”). 6. In the genitive and dative, the masculine and neuter will always be identical. 7. Memorize the square of stops (Greek grammar - stops - square). 8. A tau cannot stand at the end of a word and will drop off.” Ref-0085, p. 333.

Greek grammar - optative mood : ☉ + “There are less than 70 optatives in the entire NT. In general, it can be said that the optative is the mood used when a speaker wishes to portray an action as possible. . . the optative is becoming absorbed by the subjunctive in the Koine period.” Ref-0129, p. 480. “If the subjunctive describes an action one step removed from reality (uncertain but possible), the optative describes an action two steps removed. It is sometimes called the mood of “wish.” Since the days of Classical Greek, the optative has been falling out of use. There are only 68 uses of the optative in the New Testament, and 15 are the expression μή γένοιτο (e.g., Rom. 6:2), “may it not be,” sometimes translated idiomatically as, “God forbid.” “May it not even be a wish, much less a probability.” Beware of any pastor or lay teacher placing too much weight on the optative; its nuanced meaning is often difficult to pin down.” Ref-0221, p. 189.

Greek grammar - ou (not) : ☉ + “οὐκ and οὐδέ are different forms of οὐ. οὐ is used when the following word begins with a consonant. οὐκ is used when the next word begins with a vowel and smooth breathing, while οὐδέ is used when the next word begins with a vowel and rough breathing.” Ref-0085, p. 43.

Greek grammar - participle : ☉ + “the participle can be used as a noun, adjective, adverb, or verb (and in any mood!). . . the participle is often thrown to the end of the sentence. . . [the main verb is sometimes] verses away. . . The context has more influence on participles than on any other area of Greek grammar. . . The time of the participle’s verbal nature. . . [is the] point of reference [of the] controlling verb, not the speaker. . . The aorist participle, for instance, usually denotes antecedent time to that of the controlling verb. But if the main verb is also aorist, this participle may indicate contemporaneous time. The perfect participle also indicates antecedent time. The present participle is used for contemporaneous time. (This contemporaneity, however, is often quite broadly conceived, depending in particular on the tense of the main verb.) the future participle denotes subsequent time. . . Every participle emphasizes either its verbal or its adjectival aspect.” Ref-0129, pp. 613-616. “The key to understanding participles is to recognize that their significance is primarily one of aspect, i.e., type of action. . . . A participle does not necessarily indicate when an action occurs (?time’: past, present, future). Because there are three aspects, there are three types of participles. 1. The present participle describes a continuous action. 2. The aorist participle describes an action without commenting on the nature of the action (undefined). 3. The perfect participle describes a completed action with present effects.” Ref-0221, p. 179. “Participles do not indicate absolute time. . . . However, participles do indicate relative time. In other words, they indicate the time relative to the time of the main verb.” Ref-0221, p. 184.

Greek grammar - perfect tense : ☉ + “. . . the perfect tense is ‘the most important, exegetically, of all the Greek Tenses.’ The perfect is used less frequently. . . when it is used, there is usually a deliberate choice on the part of the writer. The force of the perfect tense is that it describes an event that, completed in the past (we are speaking of the perfect indicative here), has results existing in the present time (i.e., in relation to the time of the speaker). . . . the perfect tense is used for ‘indicating not the past action as such but the present state of affairs resulting from the past action.’ . . . more misleading is the notion, frequently found in commentaries, that the perfect tense denotes permanent or eternal results. Such a statement is akin to saying the aorist tense means ‘once for all.’ Implications of this sort are to be drawn from considerations that are other than grammatical in nature. Once must be careful not to read his or her theology into the syntax whenever it is convenient. . . . the perfect may be viewed as combining the aspects of both the aorist and present tense. . . . there is a tendency to see the English perfect as placing an emphasis on existing results—a notion foreign to English grammar. As Moule notes, ‘the Greek tense is concerned with result while the English tense is concerned solely with the absence . . . of an interval.’” Ref-0129, pp. 572-574. “1. Sometimes the emphasis is on the fact that the action was completed (consummative, extensive). . . . 2. Other times the emphasis is on the resulting state of the action (intensive) and is generally translated by the English present.” Ref-0221, p. 163. “The definition enshrined for centuries regarding continuance of completed action must now be replaced. This definition was never without problems, as an examination of the grammars shows, where various categories must be introduced to cope with major conceptual difficulties (e.g. discussions of so-called intensive, extensive and completed perfects).” Ref-0774, p. 40.

Greek grammar - phrase identification : ☉ + See Ref-0221, pp. 136-141.

Greek grammar - pluperfect tense : ☉ + “The pluperfect tense. . . expresses action that took place in the past with the effect continuing up to a point, but from the writer’s viewpoint the action and the effect are past experiences. The Greek pluperfect corresponds to the English past perfect tense (ελελυκειν = ?I had loosed).” Ref-0099, p. 115. “both [perfect and pluperfect] speak of the state resulting from a previous event—the perfect speaking of existing results in the present (with reference to the speaker), the pluperfect speaking of existing results in the past (as this tense occurs only in the indicative mood). Thus it may be said that the pluperfect combines the aspects of the aorist (for the event) and the imperfect (for the results). . . the force of the pluperfect tense is that it describes an event that, completed in the past, has results that existed in the past as well (in relation to the time of speaking). The pluperfect makes no comment about the results existing up to the time of speaking.” Ref-0129, p. 583. “The function of the pluperfect is to bring two actions in the past into a special relation with each other in order to indicate that the action described by the pluperfect was completed before the other took place.” Ref-0819, p. 102.

Greek grammar - pluperfect tense - vs. perfect tense : ☉ + “. . . both speak of an event accomplished in the past (in the indicative mood, that is) with results existing afterwards -- the perfect speaking of results existing in the present, the pluperfect speaking of results existing in the past. . . The action is presented externally (summary), while the resultant state proceeding from the action is presented internally (continuous state).” Ref-0129, pp. 572-573.

Greek grammar - predicate nominative : John 1:1 (predicate nominative) ☉ + “When the subject takes an equative verb like ‘is’. . . then another noun also appears in the nominative case -- the predicate nominative. In English the subject and predicate nominative are distinguished by word order (the subject comes first). not so in Greek. . . if one of the two nouns has the definite article, it is the subject. A good illustration of this is John 1:1c. . . in the Greek reads και θεος ην ὁ λογος (and God was the Word). We know that ‘the Word’ is the subject because it has the definite article and we translate it accordingly: ‘and the Word was God.’ Two questions, both of theological import, should come to mind: (1) why was θεος thrown forward? and (2) why does it lack the article? In brief, its emphatic position stresses its essence or quality: ‘What God was, the Word was’ is how one translation brings out this force. Its lack of definite article keeps us from identifying the person of the Word (Jesus Christ) with the person of ‘God’ (the Father). That is to say, the word order tells us that Jesus Christ has all the divine attributes that the Father has; lack of the article tells us that Jesus Christ is not the Father. . . . As Martin Luther said, the lack of an article is against Sabellianism; the word order is against Arianism.” Ref-0085, p. 28. “How do you tell which nominative is the subject, and which is the predicate nominative? In descending order . . . If only one is a person, demonstrative, or relative pronoun, it is the subject . . . If only one has a definite article, that articular noun is the subject . . . If all else falls - whichever noun comes first is the subject . . ." Ref-0352, p. 12.

Greek grammar - predicate positions : ☉ + T = article, A = adjective, N = noun. 1st. ATN 'good the king' translated as 'good is the king.' 2nd. TNA 'the king good' translated as 'the king is good.' Ref-0129, p. 308.

Greek grammar - preposition - case : ☉ + "Whenever any of the oblique [other than nominative] cases follows a preposition, you should examine the use of the preposition, rather than the case usage, to determine the possible nuances involved. . . in Hellenistic Greek, because of the tendency toward explicitness, the preposition increasingly gained independent value. Thus, the preposition does not just clarify the case's usage; often, it alters it." Ref-0129, pp. 360-361 (When exegeting, consult the lexicon concerning the preposition first. Then, armed with that data, consult a grammar based on the case.) "In Greek, the meaning of a preposition depends upon the case of its object. For example, the preposition δια means 'through' if its object is in the genitive, but 'on account of' if its object is in the accusative." Ref-0085, p. 56.

Greek grammar - preposition - definition : ☉ + "A preposition is a word that indicates the relationship between two words. In the sentence, 'The book is under the table,' the preposition 'under' describes the relationship between 'book' and 'table,' which in this case is a spatial relationship. . . . The function of a preposition in Greek is the same as English. . . . [but in Greek,] the meaning of a preposition depends upon the case of its object." See Greek grammar - preposition - case. "Greek regularly drops the article in a prepositional phrase. If it fits the context, you may put it back in. ὁ λόγος ἔρχεται εἰς κόσμον. = "The word goes into the world." " Ref-0085, p. 59.

Greek grammar - preposition - meanings : ☉ + "A very important fact to remember in studying prepositions is that each one, unlike the English use, may be used to express one or several either kindred or diversified ideas. The best way to determine the meanings of a preposition is to study it in its various contexts and note its various uses" Ref-0957, pp. 98-99.

Greek grammar - preposition - verb : ☉ + "Stative verbs override the transitive force of prepositions. Almost always, when a stative verb is used with a transitive preposition, the preposition's natural force is neutralized; all that remains is a stative idea. When a verb of motion is used with a stative preposition, again the verb is usually dominant. . . ." Ref-0129, p. 359.

Greek grammar - present tense : ☉ + "The present tense indicates either a continuous or undefined action. The translator can choose either 'I am studying' or 'I study' based on which fits the context best. . . the time frame of the verb is from the time frame of the speaker/writer, not the hearer/reader. . . . In the present tense, the middle and passive forms of the verb are identical. . . . What follows are some of the more common ways in which the present tense is used in Greek. . . . 1. no real continuous nature (instantaneous, aoristic, punctiliar) . . . 2. an ongoing action (progressive, descriptive) . . . 3. some actions occur repeatedly (iterative) . . . 4. actions occur regularly but not necessarily at the same time (customary, habitual, general) . . . 5. timeless (gnomic) . . . 6. it is possible for the Greek present tense to refer to an action that occurs in the past. The idea is to make the telling of the past event more vivid by using the present tense (historical, dramatic) . . . The event could also be future (φουριστιχ)." Ref-0221, p. 151-153.

Greek grammar - pronoun - autos : ☉ + "It is wrong to think of αὐτός only as the third person pronoun. The word αὐτός actually performs three distinct functions. Use 1: Pronoun. αὐτός can function as a third person personal pronoun. This is by far the most common use. . . . Use 2: Adjectival intensive. αὐτός can also function intensively when it is used adjectivally. In this case αὐτόν is usually in the predicate position. Translate αὐτός with the reflexive pronoun (himself, herself, itself, themselves, etc.). . . . αὐτός ὁ ἀπόστολος = "the apostle himself" . . . When functioning as an intensive, αὐτός is usually in the nominative case and modifies the subject. αὐτός Δαὶδ εἶπεν ἐν τῷ πνεύματι τῷ ἁγίῳ (Mark 12:36) = "David himself spoke by the Holy Spirit." . . . Use 3: Identical adjective. αὐτός is sometimes used as the identical adjective meaning "same." It is normally in the attributed position when used this way, but not always. . . . καὶ πάλιν ἀπελθὼν προσήγατο τὸν αὐτὸν λόγον (Mark 14:39) = "And again after going away he prayed the same thing." " Ref-0085, pp. 96-98. "When we find the third person personal pronoun in the nominative, the pronoun tells us the gender of the subject--something that the personal ending [of the verb] cannot. One note of caution. When αὐτός is the subject and the verb is first or second person, you may have a tendency to translate αὐτός as a third person pronoun ("he/she/it"). But since the verb is first or second [person], αὐτός is "I/we" or "you." For example, αὐτὴ λέγει (second person singular "you speak") ἀνθρώποις might seem to mean, "She speaks to men." This is incorrect. The αὐτὴ is merely adding emphasis to the subject, which is "You." It should be translated "You (yourself) speak to men." " Ref-0085, p. 130.

Greek grammar - pronoun - relative : ☉ + "The relative pronouns are ὁς, ἡ, and ὅ. They follow the normal 2-1-2 declension patterns (like αὐτός) and always have a rough breathing and an accent. . . . The case of the relative pronoun is determined by its function in the relative clause. Do not confuse the relative pronoun with the adjective whose case is determined by the word it modifies. ὁ ἄνθρωπος ὃν γινώσκωμεν διδάσκει ἡμᾶς (The man whom we know teaches us.) In this example you can see that even though the antecedent (ἄνθρωπος) is nominative, the relative pronoun (ὃν) is accusative because it is the direct object of the verb γινώσκωμεν. . . . The term "relative clause" refers to the relative pronoun and the words that follow it. If you place a comma before the relative pronoun and after the last word of the clause, the enclosed phrase should make sense. In fact, this kind of partitioning is a good practice when learning to translate." Ref-0085, pp. 111-112. "Greek, as is the case with any language, does not always follow the basic rules. . . . This is the case with the relative pronoun. Its case is supposed to be determined by its function, but in certain situations we see that it is altered to be the same case as its antecedent, as if it were modifying it. This is called "attraction." " Ref-0085, p. 114.

Greek grammar - pronunciation : ☉ + "Remember, in Greek there are no silent consonants, so the pi [in πνεύμα] is pronounced; unlike in English where, for example, the "p" is not pronounced in the word, "pneumatic." " Ref-0085 p. 19. "The pronunciation of these vowels in the past history of the Greek language is a problem practically impossible to solve. The interchange in the papyri of vowels and diphthongs and vice versa, and of vowels for one another shows that there was much duplication in sound, but just what the sounds were we are unable to tell. . . . Robertson was undoubtedly correct in his opinion that the Greek of the New Testament was pronounced much more like the vernacular Greek of Demosthenes' times than like the Modern Greek (R-S. 15). The matter must be left an open question. . . . Like the vowels, the pronunciation of the diphthongs is a problem for which there can be no final solution." Ref-0957, pp. 21-22.

Greek grammar - proper name : ☉ + "θεος is not a proper name in Greek. One rule of thumb for detecting proper names in Greek is simply to ask the question, Can the noun in question be pluralized? Since θεοι is possible (cf. John 10:34), θεος is not a proper name." Ref-0129, p. 43.

Greek grammar - punctuation lacking : Rom. 9:5 ☉ + "When the New Testament was first written, there were no punctuation marks. . . the words were run together one after another without any separation. . . the way a verse is punctuated can have a significant effect on the interpretation of the verse. One outstanding example is Romans 9:5. If a major stop is placed after κατα σαρκα (?according to the flesh'), then the final section of the verse is a statement about God the Father (the NEB has 'May God, supreme above all, be blessed for ever! Amen'). However, if a minor stop is placed at that point, the final words of the sentence speak of Christ (The NIV has 'Christ, who is God over all, forever praised! Amen')." Ref-0085, p. 13. Dr. S. Lewis Johnson gives the following reasons why this passage applies the title of God to Christ: (1) Pauline doxologies are usually an integral part of the preceding sentence -- not usually an illustration of a asyndeton; (2) In independent doxologies the word for blessing such as εὐλογητος is almost always the first word which is not the case here; (3) The use of the article το before κατα σαρκα suggests an antithesis to what is to follow -- according to His divine nature; (4) An independent doxology would be unexpected since the privileges have been mentioned to emphasize Israel's grievous disobedience by pointing out the great blessings they were given which they yet rejected. One of these is the birth of the God-man; (5) The phrase ὁ ὢν is usually naturally relational -- 'who is over all. . .'; (6) The context of passage suggests a lament rather than purely an offering of praise to God. Ref-0149, Tape 1:B.

Greek grammar - question : ☉ + "The form of a Greek question is not necessarily different from a statement; the punctuation and context are your main clues." Ref-0085 p. 14.

Greek grammar - root - verbal : ☉ + The root of the verb is its most basic form. For example, the root of ἀγαπάω is ἀγαπα. The present tense stem and the verbal root of some verbs happen to be the same. These are referred to as "regular verbs." Ref-0085, pp. 162-163. See Greek grammar - stem - verbal.

Greek grammar - semantic range : ☉ + "Words don't have exact counterparts in different languages. The range of meaning of an English word will almost never be the same as the range of meaning for the Greek word behind the English. We call this the word's 'semantic range.' So just because an English word can have a certain meaning, it is by no means certain that the Greek or Hebrew behind it has that specific meaning." Ref-0221, p. xv.

Greek grammar - sigma : ☉ + ν and ντ drop out before ζ. See also Greek grammar - stops - sigma.

Greek grammar - stem - verbal : ☉ + The stem of a verb is the most basic form of the verb in a particular tense. The verbal root λυ forms its present tense as λύω and its future as λύσω. In the case of this verb, the same stem λυ is used in both tenses (and just happens to match the verbal root). The present tense stem and the verbal root of some verbs happen to be the same. These are referred to as "regular verbs." Some verbs modify their verbal root when forming their different tense stems. This is especially true in the formation of the present tense. The present tense is by far the most irregular of all the tenses. The distinction between the verbal root and stem is important. If you assume that the present tense stem is the base form of the verb and all other tenses are derived from it, you will become very confused and potentially discouraged since this approach forces you to memorize hundreds of "irregular" forms. However, if you learn that the different tense stems are formed from the verbal root and not the present tense stem, memorization and frustration can be kept to a minimum. For example, the verbal root βαλ is modified to form its present tense stem by doubling the lambda: βάλλω. However, when you arrive at the future, you will see that there is only one lambda: βαλώ. The aorist tense also has only one lambda: ἔβαλον. The point of the illustration is that if you learn the present tense as the base form, both these forms will appear irregular. But if you learn the root as βαλ, these two forms are perfectly regular. It is the present tense stem that is irregular. You must realize that the present tense stem is the most "irregular" tense stem of all. The verbal root is altered to form the present tense stem more than in all the other tenses put together. You must get away from thinking that the future tense stem is an altered form of the present tense stem. It is not. Ref-0085, pp. 162-163. See Greek grammar - root - verbal.

Greek grammar - stops - sigma : ☉ + Whenver a stop and a sigma come into contact the result is as follows: | Labial + σ -> ψ | Velar (Palatal) + σ -> ξ | Dental + σ -> σ | Ref-0085, p. 79.

Greek grammar - stops - square : ☉ + Horizontal ---- | Labial = π β φ + σ -> ψ | Velar (Palatal) = κ γ ξ + σ -> ξ | Dental = τ δ φ + σ -> σ | Vertical ---- | Unvoiced = π κ τ | Voiced = β γ δ | Aspirates = φ ξ θ | Sigma joined = ψ ξ σ | Ref-0085, pp. 78, 156.

Greek grammar - subjunctive mood : ☉ + ". . .the subjunctive can be said to represent the verbal action (or state) as uncertain but probable. It is not correct to call this the mood of uncertainty because the optative also presents the verb as uncertain. Rather, it is better to call it the mood of probability so as to distinguish it from the optative. . . . When used in result clauses, for example, the subjunctive cannot be said to express 'probability.'" Ref-0129, pp. 461-462.

Greek grammar - tense : ☉ + "In Greek, a tense carries two connotations: aspect and time. For example, the aorist tense . . . describes an undefined action (aspect) that normally occurs in the past (time). . . . I use the term 'tense' to refer only to the form of the verb . . . and I do not use the term to designate when the action of the verb occurs. I always use the term 'time' to describe when the action of that verb occurs. Please do not confuse 'tense' and 'time.'" Ref-0221, pp. p. 146. "It is not altogether clear that "tense" is a very accurate way of referring to the "Greek tenses." The word tense calls up notions of time: present tense, future tense, and so forth. But suppose a verb form is morphologically "present tense" while not in fact referring to present time but to past time: then shall we refer to such an example as "past present tense"? The possibilities for confusion are boundless. To aid in the clarity of the following discussion, I shall use "tense" only to refer to morphological form, with no implications whatsoever with respect to time. The majority of contemporary students of Greek grammar argue that Greek tenses are time-related in the indicative and reflect Aktionsart ("kind of action") outside the indicative. I am not persuaded this is right. A rising number of Greek grammarians argue that the fundamental semantic force of the Greek tense is "aspect": it reflects the author's choice of ho to present an action. The time of the action is not conveyed by the Greek tense (which virtually all sides concede is true outside the indicative anyway), nor the kind of action that took place, but by the author's conception of that action -- for example, an author might think of a particular action as a "complete" action, even if it took a very long time, and choose to use the aorist tense."² Ref-0698, p. 67. "The problem is that in Greek a tense carries two connotations: aspect and time. For example, the aorist tense describes an undefined action (aspect) that normally occurs in the past (time)." Ref-0085, p. 120. ☉ + "The Greek verb presents five distinctive verse stems; viz., aorist, present, future, perfect, and passive." Ref-0957, p. 49.

Greek grammar - tense - aspect : Greek grammar - aspect ☆

Greek grammar - tense - future active indicative : ☉ + "Unlike other tenses in which the time element is not primary, the future tense always refers to an event in the future. In the future tense a verb is composed of four parts: the present tense stem (λυ); the tense formative (σ); the connecting vowel (ο or ε); a personal ending (e.g., μεν)." | Form of the Future Active Indicative (person-number/form/translation/tense formative/connecting vowel/personal ending) | 1s/λύσω/I am losing/σ / ο / - | 2s/λύσεις/You are losing/σ / ε / ς [1] | 3s/λύσει/He, she, it is losing/σ / ε / ι | 1p/λύσομεν/We are losing/σ / ο / μεν | 2p/λύσετε/You (all) are losing/σ / ε / τε | 3p/λύσουσι(v)/They are losing/σ / ο / νσι |

[1] - The personal ending actually is σι. The sigma dropped out and was evidently added back on to the end (λυσει --> λυει --> λύεις). This explains where the ι arises in this form. Ref-0085, pp. 127, 155.

Greek grammar - tense - future middle indicative : ☉ + | Form of the Future Middle Indicative (person-number/form/translation/tense formative/connecting vowel/personal ending) | 1s/λύσομαι/I will loose myself/σ / ε / μαι | 2s/λύσῃ[1]/You will loose yourself/σ / ε / σαι | 3s/λύσεται/He (she, it) loosed himself/σ / ε / ται | 1p/λύσομεθα/We will loose ourselves/σ / ο / μεθα | 2p/λύσεσθε/You (all) will loose yourselves/σ / ε / σθε | 3p/λύσονται/They will loose themselves/σ / ο / νται | [1] - The second person singular ending is quite troublesome. Because the sigma occurs between vowels (λυς + ε + σαι), it will usually drop out and the vowels will contract. In this case, they contracted to eta as per the rules and the iota subscripted (λυς + ε + σαι --> λυσαι --> λυσηι --> λυση). | Ref-0085, p. 157.

Greek grammar - tense - infinitive : ☉ + "When [an infinitive] is preceded by a definite article, the article is always neuter singular and is declined according to the function of the infinitive. For example, if the infinitive is the subject, the article will be in the nominative case. . . . Aspect. . . . The infinitive has no time significance whatsoever. The only difference between the infinitive built on the present stem and that built on the aorist stem is one of aspect. The infinitive built on the present stem indicates a continuous action; the infinitive built on the aorist stem indicates an undefined action; the infinitive built on the perfect stem indicates a completed action with ongoing implications. Due to the limitations of English, it is usually impossible to carry this significance across into English. Translators generally use the present punctiliar form of the verb (e.g., "to see," "to eat"). Articular infinitive and preposition. When the infinitive is preceded by a preposition and the article, there are specific rules of translation. . . . μετά indicating antecedent time (i.e., the infinitive happened before the main verb) . . . εν indicating contemporaneous time . . . προ indicating prior time (i.e., the infinitive happened after the main verb) . . . διά indicating reason or cause . . . εις indicating purpose . . . προς indicating purpose. . . . Purpose. Purpose can be expressed using the articular infinitive preceded by εις or προς (discussed above). The articular infinitive with the article in the genitive case (no preposition) can also express purpose. . . . The infinitive all by itself (without a preposition or the article) can express purpose." Ref-0221, p. 190-192.

Greek grammar - tense - present active indicative : ☉ + "It describes an action that usually occurs in the present. It can be either continuous ("I am studying") or undefined ("I study") action. We recommend using a continuous translation by default, and if it does not fit the context switch to the undefined. . . . In the present tense a verb is composed of three parts: the present tense stem (λυ); the connecting vowel (ο or ε); a personal ending (e.g., μεν)." | Form of the Present Active Indicative (person-number/form/translation/connecting vowel/personal ending) | 1s/λύω/I am loosing/o/- | 2s/λύεις/You are loosing/ε / ζ [1] | 3s/λύει/He, she, it is loosing/ε / ι | 1p/λύομεν/We are loosing/ο / μεν | 2p/λύετε/You (all) are loosing/ε / τε | 3p/λύουσι(ν)/They are loosing/ο / νσι | [1] - The personal ending actually is σι. The sigma dropped out and was evidentially added back on to the end (λυεσι --> λυει --> λύεις). This explains where the ι arises in this form. Ref-0085, pp. 125-128. "[The primary suffixes] are used with unaugmented or primary tenses. . . . In the active voice they are: singular μι, σι, τι; plural μεν, τε, νσι. These suffer great change when used in actual inflection; e.g., ο-μι becomes ω; ε-σι becomes ει; ε-τι becomes ει; and ο-νσι becomes ουσι." Ref-0957, p. 54.

Greek grammar - tense - present middle/passive indicative : ☉ + | Form of the Present Middle/Passive Indicative (person-number/form/translation/connecting vowel/personal ending) | 1s/λύομαι/I am being loosed/ο / μαι | 2s/λύῃ[1]/You are being loosed/ε / σαι | 3s/λύεται/He, she, it is being loosed/ε / ται | 1p/λύομεθα/We are being loosed/ο / μεθα | 2p/λύεσθε/You (all) are being loosed/ε / σθε | 3p/λύονται/They are being loosed/ο / νται | [1] - The second person singular ending is quite troublesome. Because the sigma occurs between vowels (λυ + ε + σαι), it will usually drop out and the vowels will contract. In this case, they contracted to eta as per the rules and the iota subscripted (λυ + ε + σαι --> λυεαι --> λυηι --> λυη). | Ref-0085, pp. 146-147. "[The primary suffixes] are used with unaugmented or primary tenses. . . . In the middle and passive they are: singular μαι, σαι, ται; plural μεθα, σθε, νται. In actual inflection σαι usually becomes η." Ref-0957, p. 54.

Greek grammar - tense - subjunctive : ☉ + "A Greek verb has time significance only in the indicative. The only significance that a verb in the subjunctive has is one of aspect. This is the same as with the participle. A verb in the present subjunctive indicates a continuous action; a verb in the aorist subjunctive indicates an undefined action. There is no concept of absolute past or absolute present time in the subjunctive." Ref-0221, p. 187.

Greek grammar - tense formative : ☉ + "The future is formed by inserting a sigma between the present tense stem and the connecting vowel. This sigma is called the "tense formative" because it helps form the future tense." Ref-0085, p. 154.

Greek grammar - tense formatives : ☉ + "To indicate different tenses in Greek, along with the augment Greek can also add a tense formative to the end of the verbal stem but before the connecting vowel and personal ending. A tense formative is a consonant or collection of letters. They are called the "tense formative" because they form the different tenses for the Greek verb. For example λύω means "I destroy." The present tense uses no tense formative. *λυ is the stem and ι is the personal ending. However, to say "I will destroy" (future), you add the tense formative "σ" between the stem of the verb and its personal ending. ἴσσω means "I will destroy." Ref-0085, p. 123.

Greek grammar - uncial alphabet : ☉ + See Ref-0957, p. 20.

Greek grammar - verb - structure : ☉ + "The typical Greek verb is composed of four parts.

1. The Verb Stem . . . It is not accurate to call this part of the verb the "root," because the root may be a still more remote element of the verb stem, . . . many verbs have more than one stem. The verb stem may usually be found by removing the affixes of the aorist, though there are exceptions . . . 2. The Tense Stem . . . 3. The Connecting Vowel . . . 4. The Verbal Suffix . . . With these facts in view we may analyze λύσωμεν thus: 1. Verb stem λυ-. 2. Tense stem λυς-. 3. Connecting vowel -ω-. 4. Verbal suffix -μεν." Ref-0957, pp. 43-44.

Therefore inversion of this order amounted to a form of cross-dressing whereby dissidents abdicated their given gender identity in favor of the opposite gender and presented themselves as homosexual. Writing between 30 B.C. and A.D. 40, the Hellenistic Jewish thinker Pseudo-Phocylides admonished parents, "If a child is a boy, do not let locks grow on his head. Braid not his crown nor make cross-knots on the top of his head. Long hair [κόμην] is not fit for men, but for voluptuous women. Guard the youthful beauty of a comely boy, because many rage for intercourse with a man." [P. About A.D. 35 the Jewish philosopher Philo condemned male homosexuals for "the provocative way they curl and dress their hair. . . . In fact the transformation of the male nature to the female is practiced by them as an art and does not raise a blush. Such people merit that one should burn with zeal to spill their blood in obedience to the Law which commands that one should kill with impunity the pervert who falsifies the stamp of nature, not permitting him to live a day or even an hour, since he is a disgrace to himself, to his family, to his country, and to the whole human race." They are usually identified with those who allowed themselves to be slaughtered rather than desecrate the Sabbath by defending themselves (1:32-38). All of the passages regarding hardening are preceded by the promise of God to harden Pharaoh's heart (Ex. 7:3-4), yet the passages regarding Pharaoh's self-hardening tend to precede the passages that indicate that God was doing the hardening. heaven - plural vs. singular : Mtt. 6:9-10 ☪

"When [heaven] is used in the plural it embraces the whole sphere of God's rule, including the Earth. But when it is used in the singular, it is the Heaven, as contrasted with, and distinct from, the Earth. When we read 'Our Father which art in Heaven,' it is plural (the heavens). If it had been the singular, it would have implied that our Father is in Heaven, but not on the earth! But it is plural and shows that He is everywhere, including the Earth. On the other hand, when it goes on to say 'Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven,' here the word is in the singular number, because Heaven and Earth are set in contrast, as distance from each other." Ref-0214, p. xxi.

But there is no observational way to distinguish them [receding velocity and the expansion of space]. Therefore, astronomers still find it convenient to describe red shifts with "equivalent velocities," as if they were caused by a Doppler effect on real recessions. But it's important to note that the modern view is not expansion of objects through space, but expansion of space, which carries the objects along with it. However, the objects usually have some proper motion through space, which does have a Doppler shift component, so the observed red shifts are a combination of the two. The further away the object, the more the cosmological portion of the red shift dominates." Ref-0232, p. 152. "We see the universe expanding on the largest scales. Therefore the assumption means that it is the fabric of space that is expanding and the galaxies are going along for the ride. And astronomers measure only distance and velocity in the expanding universe. Distance is determined from the brightness or magnitude of the sources and velocity from their redshifts." Ref-0813, pp. 199-200. "From a review of this question I have come to the position that it is not possible to categorically state that Scripture requires that the universe is expanding at all." Hebrew - gospels? : Mtt. 8:13; Mtt. 16:18; Mark 7:26; John 12:20-22 ☉

"One position is that the Gospels have only the "voice" of Jesus -- i.e., the essence of what He said, but not His very words. Several reasons support the ipsissima vox position. (1) The strongest support contents that Jesus probably gave most of His teaching in Aramaic, because that was the dominant public language of first-century Israel. The Gospel writers wrote in Greek, meaning that most, if not all, of Jesus' teaching recorded there is a translation, not His very words. In response to such reasoning, the flat assertion must be that no one in modern times knows with certainty what language Jesus spoke most of the time. That information is not available in modern times, but archaeological and other types of studies make a strong case to support His extensive use of Greek. The area where Jesus taught was actually trilingual, with Hebrew Aramaic, and Greek languages sharing equally in usage. In NT times the influence of Hellenism on Israel was profound. The Jewish institution of the Sanhedrin had a Greek name (derived from the Greek noun συνέδριον). Some scholars now hold that Greek was the primary language spoken in Israel by Jesus. They point to such things as "the role of Greek as the lingua franca of the Roman Empire, the linguistic and cultural character of lower Galilee during the first century, the linguistic fact that the NT has been transmitted in Greek from its earliest documents, a diversity of epigraphic evidence, significant literary evidence, and several significant contexts in the Gospels." The exclusive use of the Greek OT in Scripture citations found in the Epistle to the Hebrews, a document either originating from or addressed to Hebrew Christians in Israel, is another indication of Greek's widespread use in the century Palestine. The use by Jesus Himself of mostly LXX sources in His quoting of the OT furnishes further evidence to this effect.

Andrew and Philip, two of Jesus' twelve apostles, had Greek names. Their encounter with a certain Greek person in John 12:20-22 is clear indication of their use of Greek. Peter, leader of the Twelve, had Hebrew and Aramaic names ("Simon" and "Cephas"), but he also had a Greek name, Peter. Most probably he spoke Greek in preaching the sermon in Acts 2 and ministering to the household of Cornelius (Acts 10). He also wrote two epistles in Greek. In the Greek text of Mtt. 16:18, Jesus plays on the difference between two Greek words, πέτρος (petros) and πέτρα (petra), a distinction that Hebrew or Aramaic is unable to make. Jesus must have used Greek in speaking with the Syrophenician woman who was a Greek (Mark 7:26), the Roman centurion (Mtt. 8:13), and Pilate (Mtt. 27; Mark 15; Luke 23; John 18). Also, Stephan (Acts 7) and James (Acts 15) quote from the Greek OT. Furthermore, Jesus' extensive use of synonyms in John 21 is additional validation for His use of Greek. He has two words for "love," two words for "know," three words for "sheep," and two words for "feed." Distinctions between such synonyms is impossible to make in either Hebrew or Aramaic. Thus, the argument that the Greek Gospel's quotations are a translation from the Aramaic that Jesus spoke is without merit." דָּבָר (dābār) the accent is on the last (i.e. ultimate) syllable, and is said to be Milra' (מִלְרָע) 'from below'; i.e. last syllable). In the word הַחֶסֶד (haḥe'sed) the accent is on the last but one (i.e. the penultimate) syllable, and is said to be Mil'el (מִלְעֵל) 'from above'; i.e. the syllable before the last). . . . "Since the sign () is used for both the accent Sillūq and Methegh, they are to be distinguished. If this sign occurs under the middle of a verse it must be Methegh; if it occurs under the accented syllable of a word at the end of a verse it is Sillūq. They may both occur together, thus: :בְּיָמֵינוּ has both a Methegh and a Sillūq. Sillūq always occurs in the accented syllable (of the last word in a verse) but Methegh never does." Hebrew grammar - acrostic : Ps. 9; Ps. 10; Ps. 25; Ps. 34; Ps. 111; Ps. 112; Ps. 119; Ps. 145; Pr. 31:10-31 ☉ “. . . the individual verses of Ps. 9; 10; 25; 34 and 145 begin with words whose first letters are, consecutively, the letters of the Hebrew alphabet. In Ps. 37, the opening letters of alternate verses are arranged according to the sequence of the alphabet. Another variation occurs in Ps. 111 and 112, where each line (rather than each verse) begins with successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet. The most elaborate acrostic biblical poem is Ps. 119. This artistically shaped poem consists of twenty-two sections, each comprised of eight verses. These units feature twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet, with all eight verses of a given unit beginning with the same letter of the alphabet. . . . Thus, everything from A to Z (or א to ת) is praised regarding the qualities of God (Ps. 111 and 145), the just man (Ps. 112), the virtuous woman (Pr. 31:10-31) or the beauty of the law (Ps. 119).” Ref-0184, p. 6.

Hebrew grammar - adjective : ☉ + Adjectives will agree with the natural gender and not the grammatical gender of the noun they modify. Ref-0184, p63n1. Adjectives agree in gender and number with the noun they modify. Adjectival usage falls into three categories: attributive - adjective follows the noun it modifies הָאִישׁ הַטּוֹב / אִישׁ טוֹב = “good man” or “a good man” / “the good man”); predicative - adjective either precedes or follows the noun, and does not match the noun in definiteness - never takes the definite article הָאִישׁ הַטּוֹב, הַטּוֹב הָאִישׁ = “the man is good”); and substantive - adjective is used independently of the noun, the noun will be lacking הַחָכָם = “the wise one”). Given that the predicative adjective never takes the definite article, certain constructions may pose ambiguity. For example אִישׁ טוֹב can be translated either as “a good man” or as “a man is good.” Ref-0184, pp. 62-65.

For example, . . . סְפֵי (spies) becomes הַסְפֵי (the spies). . . . [but when] the Dagheš Forte is given up . . . the Pathach vowel (short a) is not lengthened. This is similar to the issue of virtual doubling with gutturals . . .” Ref-0184, p. 42. Gutturals and א reject the Dagheš Forte of the definite article. Instead, one of the following occur: (1) Compensatory Lengthening. With initial א, א, and בּ, the Pathach lengthens to Qamets (א --> אָ); (2) Virtual Doubling. With initial א and א, the Dagheš Forte is rejected but no lengthening occurs; (3) Irregular Seghol Vowel. When nouns begin with unaccented א, א, or א, the definite article appears with a Seghol vowel and without the Dagheš Forte, א. Ref-0184, p. 46. The definite article may, at times be used like a demonstrative (this, that): אֲנִי מְצַוְךָ הַיּוֹם = “I am commanding you this day (today).” It is also used to indicate direct address (vocative): וַיִּקְרָא לְאַמְרֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ = “And he called saying, ‘O king.’” It may also be used as a superlative: הַטּוֹב וְהַיָּשָׁר = “the best and the most upright.” It may also indicate possession: וַיִּלְקַח דָּוִד הַצִּנּוֹר = “And David took his harp.” Ref-0184, pp. 48-49. “(a) The definite article ‘the’ is said to have been originally א (like the Arabic ‘al’). When attached to the word it defined (e.g., הַמֶּלֶךְ ‘the king’), the vowelless א was assimilated and the following letter was consequently doubled, with Dagheš Forte אַ. The article . . . before an ordinary (non-guttural) letter is א followed by Dagheš Forte. (b) When the article is prefixed to a word beginning with a guttural א, א or א then, since these letters cannot be doubled (i.e. will not admit the Dagheš Forte which should follow the article), certain adjustments in the pointing of the article have to be made as follows: (i) Before the weaker gutturals א, א and the letter א the article is א. (ii) Before the stronger gutturals א, א the article is א. No Dagheš Forte, of course, follows, nor is the vowel under the article lengthened; Dagheš Forte is said to be implicit in the harsh sounds of the gutturals. (iii) Before an unaccented א and א and always before א the article is א. (iv) However, before an accented א and א the article is א, as in (i).” Ref-0128, pp. 23-25.

Hebrew grammar - causation - piel vs. hipil : ☉ + “Piel signifies to bring about a state, and the hipil, to cause an event. . . With the piel, the object is transposed passively into a new state or condition. . . With the hipil, however, the object participates in the event expressed by the verbal root. . . the hipil originally signified: X (the subject) caused that Y (the second subject [the object]) be or do something.” Ref-0157, pp. 433-435.

Hebrew grammar - causation - pual vs. hopal : ☉ + “Whereas in Pual the subject is made into a state represented by the root, in Hopal it is caused, or suffers the effects of having been caused, to bein the event signified by the root. . . The object of the causative notion with the hipil stem becomes the subject with the hopal stem; the agent, expressed in the hipil, is normally unexpressed in the hopal.” Ref-0157, pp. 447-448.

Hebrew grammar - clause - noun vs. verbal : Gen. 1:2 ☉ + “Says Gesenius: ‘every sentence, the subject and predicate of which are nouns or their equivalents (esp. participles), is called a noun clause.’” Examples of noun clauses are such verses as “The Lord is our King” (Isa. 33:32); “Now the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners.” (Gen. 13:13), and “A mouth is theirs.” (Ps. 115:5). On the other hand, “every sentence, the subject of which is a noun (or pronoun, including a verbal-form) and its predicate a finite verb, is called a verbal-clause.” Examples of this include “And God said” (Gen. 1:3), and “And he divided” (Gen. 1:7). This distinction between noun-clauses and verbal-clauses is, as Gesenius points out, “indispensable to the more delicate appreciation of Hebrew syntax (and that of the Semitic languages generally), since it is by no means merely external or format, but involves fundamental differences of meaning. Noun clauses with a substantive as predicate, represent something fixed, a state or in short, a being so and so; verbal clauses on the other hand, something moveable and in progress, an event or action. The latter description is indeed true in a certain sense also of noun-clauses with a participial predicate, except that in their case the event or action (as distinguished from that expressed by the verbal-clause) is of a fixed and abiding character.” When Genesis 1:2 is compared with the two descriptions above, it is easily seen that the first clause is a noun clause.” Ref-0819, pp. 77-78.

Hebrew grammar - compensatory lengthening : ☉ + “There are three patterns of compensatory lengthening with which you need to become familiar. Each pattern involves the lengthening of a short vowel to a changeable long vowel. Pathach lengthens to Qamets (א --> אָ), Hireq lengthens to Tsere (א --> אֵ) and Qibbuts lengthens to Holem (א --> אֹ).” Ref-0184, p. 41n1.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - cohortative : ☉ + “This second volitional conjugation is used much like the imperative, to express a wish, request or command, It may also be used, however, to express purpose (in order to) or result (resulting in). The Cohortative conjugation occurs in the first person, for example, “Let me (first person singular) honor the Lord!” or “Let us (first person plural) honor the Lord!”” Ref-0184, p. 130.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - imperative : ☉ + “The next three conjugations (Imperative, Cohortative and Jussive) are volitional conjugations, meaning they are used to express some type of command, wish or desire. The Imperative conjugation is used primarily to express direct commands, demanding immediate action from the one being addressed. It can also be used to request permission or communicate a request. He Hebrew Imperative occurs only in the second person. For example, “(You) defend the cause of the weak!”” Ref-0184, p. 130.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - imperfect : ☉ + “The Imperfect conjugation is used to express incomplete action and is usually translated by the English present tense (I study) or future tense (I will study). The action of the verb occurs either at the time of speaking or after the time of speaking. The Hebrew Imperfect is also used to denote habitual or customary action, whether in the past, present or future (he prays regularly, he used to pray). The Imperfect may also be rendered by one of several modal values (would, could, should, may, might, can, etc.). These modal translation values are suggested by various contextual considerations. It must also be emphasized that, like the Perfect, the Hebrew Imperfect does not have tense (time of action) apart from context and issues of syntax. It too signifies aspect (type of action). The Imperfect aspect designates a verbal action for which, in the mind of the speaker or writer, the conclusion is not in view. To state it differently, the Imperfect aspect denotes incomplete action, whether in the past, present or future." Ref-0184, pp. 129-130.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - infinitive absolute :

☉ + "The Hebrew Infinitive Absolute has no real English counterpart. It may be used in conjunction with other verbs to emphasize or intensify the verbal action. It may also be used in the place of an Imperative to express a command. In special instances, it can be used with other verbs to express two verbal actions occurring at the same time, that is, contemporaneous action." Ref-0184, p. 131.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - infinitive construct :

☉ + "An Infinitive is a verbal noun. In Hebrew, there are two Infinitive forms: the Infinitive Construct and the Infinitive Absolute. The Infinitive Construct may function much like an English Infinitive, usually translated with the preposition "to" plus a verb as in "to study" or "to learn." Like a noun, it can be used as the subject (to study is hard work) or object of a verb (I want to study). It may also be used in a number of other ways . . ." Ref-0184, p. 131.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - jussive :

☉ + "The Jussive conjugation is also used to express either some type of mild command or strong wish. Strictly speaking, it occurs only in the third person, singular and plural. For example "May the Lord (third person) give to me another son." Ref-0184, p. 130.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - participle :

☉ + "A Participle is a verbal adjective. As such, it has both verbal and adjective characteristics. Verbally, it expresses some type of verbal action such as "studying" or "learning." Adjectivally, it is used much like a Hebrew adjective: attributively, predicatively or substantively." Ref-0184, p. 131.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - perfect :

☉ + "The Perfect conjugation is used to express completed action or a state of being. When used to describe a completed action (either in reality or in the mind of the speaker), the Hebrew Perfect may be translated by the English past tense (he studied), present perfect (he has studied), past perfect (he had studied) or future perfect (he will have studied). When used to describe a state of being, it will be translated with the English present tense (he is wise). The Hebrew Perfect may also be translated by the English present tense with verbs of perception or attitude (he knows, he loves). It must be emphasized that the Hebrew Perfect does not have tense (time of action) apart from the context and issues of syntax. Rather, it signifies aspect (type of action). The Perfect aspect designates a verbal action with its conclusion envisioned in the mind of the speaker or writer. To state it differently, the Perfect aspect denotes completed action, whether in the past, present or future." Ref-0184, p. 129.

Hebrew grammar - conjugation - suffix :

☉ + "The Perfect conjugation is also called the "suffix" conjugation because different inflectional endings or sufformatives are added to the verbal root in order to indicate person, gender, and number." Ref-0184, p. 147.

Hebrew grammar - conjugations : ☉ + "The term "conjugation" is used to describe the inflected verbal forms that express particular verbal functions." Ref-0184, p. 133. "In Hebrew, there are eight basic verbal conjugations: Perfect, Imperfect, Imperative, Cohortative, Jussive, Infinitive Construct, Infinitive Absolute and Participle. This means that a verb in the Qal may be conjugated any one of eight different ways depending on what verbal function the author intends. . . . Each of the derived stems (Niphal, Piel, Pual, etc.) may also be conjugated in any one of these eight different conjugations." Ref-0184, pp. 128-129.

Hebrew grammar - conjugations - volitional :

☉ + "To sum up the volitional conjugations [Hebrew grammar - conjugation - imperative, Hebrew grammar - conjugation - cohortative, Hebrew grammar - conjugation - jussive], all three are used to express some type of command, request or desire. Context will help determine which volitional nuance is intended by the author. The Cohortative occurs in the first person (I, we) the Imperative in the second person (you) and the Jussive in the third person (he, she, it, they)." Ref-0184, p. 130.

Hebrew grammar - conjunction - waw :

☉ + There are two circumstances in which the conjunction will appear as ׀ (Shureq): (1) before the labial ("bump") consonants, ׀ ׀ ׀ (׀ ׀ ׀); (2) before most consonants having a vocal shewa, ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ (׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀) (with the exception that contraction occurs with words that begin with ׀ forming ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀). Before a reduced or Hateph vowel, the conjunction is spelled with the corresponding short vowel of the Hateph vowel (e.g., ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ + ׀ --> ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀), the ׀ in the conjunction deriving from the original ׀. Ref-0184, p. 44. "Before monosyllabic words and certain words with initial accent, the conjunction is spelled with Qamets (׀)." Ref-0184, p. 46.

Hebrew grammar - construct chain :

☉ + All nouns except the last in the chain appear in construct form, whereas the last appears in absolute form. The absolute form of a noun is also its lexical form. The definiteness of a construct chain is determined by the definiteness of the last (absolute) noun (the construct nouns will appear as if indefinite). Since the nouns of a construct chain cannot be separated by other words, an adjective which modifies either the construct or absolute noun must follow the entire chain. The adjective must agree with the noun in modifies in gender, number, and definiteness. For example: ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ (the good word of the queen) vs. ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ ׀ (the word of the good queen). Ref-0184, pp. 97-100.

"Most construct nouns change their spelling in comparison with their absolute or lexical forms. This is the result of the construct noun surrendering its primary accent or stress to the absolute noun in the construct chain [thereby undergoing vowel reduction]. The most significant changes are listed below. a. In the construct form of endingless nouns (except for Segholate nouns), Qamets (and sometimes Tsere) changes to Pathach in a final closed syllable. Qamets and Tsere change to Vocal Shewa in an open, unaccented syllable (or a reduced vowel with gutturals). b. The masculine plural (׀ ׀) and dual (׀ ׀) endings are replaced by ׀ in the construct state and the rules of vowel reduction are applied. c. The ׀ ending of a feminine singular noun changes to ׀ in the construct state and the rules of vowel reduction are applied. d. Feminine plural nouns ending in ׀ ׀ retain this diagnostic ending in the construct and the rules of vowel reduction are applied. e. Certain singular monosyllabic nouns add Hireq Yod to their stem as in ׀ ׀ (father of). f. The singular absolute or lexical form of a Segholate noun is identical to its singular construct form. The plural construct form follows the pattern of ׀ ׀ (kings of). g. Nouns ending in ׀ have a singular construct ending in ׀ as in ׀ (field of)." Ref-0184, pp. 106-107. "The word (in the absolute state) upon which the construct depends, is said to be the genitive . . . the genitive case ending has been lost. . ." Ref-0128, p. 44, 44n8. "The word in the construct state never takes the article. When the compound idea is definite it is (not the word in the construct but) the genitive (following it) which takes the article, thus: . . . the man-of-God ׀ ׀ ׀ Ref-0957, p. 46.

". . . it is helpful to note that all verbs exhibiting an intensive type of action (Piel, Pual and Hithpael) insert a Dagesh Forte into the second consonant of the verbal root. This is a "diagnostic" feature of the intensive stems." Ref-0184, p. 126. See Hebrew grammar - dagesh forte vs. dagesh lene. "Dagesh Forte . . . may be (i) Compensative - when, for some reason, a letter is assimilated, the following one is doubled (with Dagesh Forte in it) to compensate for its loss; (ii) Characteristic - the characteristic of certain conjugations of the verb is the doubling of the second root letter, which receives the Dagesh Forte; (iii) Euphonic - a letter in a word is sometimes doubled for clearer pronunciation. Note: When the letter to be doubled is a guttural or ׀ then, since these cannot be doubled (i.e. receive Dagesh Forte) the preceding vowel is lengthened." Ref-0128, pp. 16-17.

Hebrew grammar - dagesh forte vs. dagesh lene :

☉ + How can you tell which Dagesh is being used in a begadkephat letter? Here are the rules: Lene: the begadkephat letter is preceded by a consonant (which may have a silent shewa) or begins a word and the previous word ends in a vowel. Forte: the begadkephat letter is preceded by a vowel. (Any dagesh not in a begadkephat letter is also forte.) Ref-0184, p. 19.

Hebrew grammar - demonstrative - pronoun : ☉ + "When a Hebrew demonstrative is functioning as pronoun, it will precede the noun and agree in gender and number, but not definiteness. Hebrew grammar - geminate nouns : ☉ + "Geminate nouns appear to have only two consonants (biconsonantal) as in עַם (people). Actually, Geminate nouns originally had three consonants. For example, the Hebrew word for "people" (עַם) was originally spelled עַמָּם. There are still a few Geminate nouns in biblical Hebrew that occasionally preserve both Geminate consonants such as לֵבָב (heart). . . . Over the years . . . the two identical consonants became one. [Note, however, that not all biconsonantal nouns were originally Geminate nouns.]" Ref-0184, p. 34.

Hebrew grammar - gender : ☉ + Feminine singular/dual/plural ending = הַ or תּ / יָ / יָ. (Note that there is a longer, unaccented הַ, termination which has nothing to do with gender, but is an old accusative ending: הַיָּד.) Masculine singular/dual/plural ending = - / יָ / יָ. Ref-0128, pp. 32-38. "There is no neuter gender in Hebrew. Inanimate things and abstract ideas are either masculine or feminine. . . . Nouns denoting those parts of the body which occur in pairs are feminine: e.g., יָד, 'a hand', עֵין, 'an eye', רֶגֶל, 'a foot'. Those parts of the body which are not duplicated are masculine, as רֹאשׁ 'head', פֶּה, 'mouth'." Ref-0128, p. 36.

Hebrew grammar - gutturals : ☉ + "The gutturals, אהחע, being throat-letters, have the following peculiarities: 1. . . they cannot be doubled and therefore never receive Dagesh Forte; instead of doubling the vowel before them is lengthened . . . 2. . . gutturals take Composite Shewa -- instead of the simple vocal shewa. . . 3. The gutturals have a preference for the vowel Pathah (א) under them and even before them. . . 4. The type of noun סוּס (sūs, 'horse') is a monosyllable with the vowel Šureq (ו) between two consonants; but the same type of noun with a terminal guttural is רוּחַ (read ?rūah, 'wind', instead of רוּחַ, rūḥ). The extra vowel--Pathah--under the guttural arises involuntarily in pronunciation when the guttural follows a full accented vowel. This is called Furtive Pathah.
SUMMARY: The guttural letters אהחע: 1. Do not admit Dagesh Forte (since they cannot be doubled) but the preceding vowel is lengthened instead. (Similarly with ה.) 2. Take Composite Shewa instead of simple Vocal Shewa. 3. Prefer the vowel Pathah (א) under them and even before them. 4. Take a Furtive Pathah after a full accented vowel." Ref-0128, pp. 19-20.

Hebrew grammar - hipil stem : ☉ + a) Hipil usually expresses the causative action of Qal. qal = he ate hipil = he caused to eat, he fed. b) Hipil is often used to form verbs from nouns and adjectives. noun = ear. hipil = to listen (lend an ear) c) Some simple verbs are found in Hipil: to cast, to destroy, to get up early, to explain, to tell. Ref-0178

Hebrew grammar - lexical form : ☉ + "The lexical form of any triconsonantal verb is the Qal Perfect 3ms. . . . [Biconsonantal] verbs are listed in the lexicon under their Infinitive Construct forms and, as such, appear with their vowel letters. In other words, מִקְרָא is listed under מִקְרָא, שָׁמַע under שָׁמַע and בִּרְאָה under בִּרְאָה." Ref-0184, pp. 133,158.

Hebrew grammar - mappiq : ☉ + "When the letter ת stands vowelless at the end of a syllable it is usually silent, as in מָה (mā). There are cases, however, where, standing vowelless at the end of a syllable, it is (not meant to have a silent or vowel-letter but) to have the full status of a consonant and be pronounced as a sharp ?h'. To illustrate: the feminine of the noun סוּס (sūs, 'horse') is סוּסָה (sūsā, 'mare'), but סוּס with the feminine singular possessive (?her horse') is סוּסָהּ (sūsāh). The ת in the first case is silent, but in the second it is audible and sharp--as denoted by the dot in it, called מַפְּיָק--Mappiq (?bringing out')." Ref-0128, p. 17.

Hebrew grammar - maqqef : ☉ + "Like pasēq, the maqqēp is not properly an accent, but is related to the accentual system in that it binds two words together into a single accentual unit. (Maqqēp means "joiner.")" Ref-0841, p. 5. "The use of the Maqqef indicates that the two joined words form a single accented unit. In other words, the first word gives up its primary accent to the second word and the entire chain is pronounced as if it were a single word. This process is known technically as "proclisis," whereby the first word becomes "proclitic" to the second word." Ref-0184, p. 99n2. "When two or more words are closely associated in meaning they are often joined together by a hyphen-like line called Maqqeph (מַקְּפֵי, 'binding'). . . only the last word of the group . . . retains its accent. . . The loss of an accent before the Maqqeph may often lead to adjustment in pointing (i.e., in vowels). . . [The Maqqeph's] effect is to deprive those words preceding it of their accents." Ref-0128, p. 12.

Hebrew grammar - masora marginalis : "These were notes that the masoretes put in the margins around the text. The masora in the side margins have come to be called the masora parva (the small masora), abbreviated Mp. The masora at the top and bottom of the page came to be called the masora magna (the large masora), abbreviated Mm. The notes contained comments about the text, preserved non-textual traditions, identified infrequently appearing words or combinations, identified the mid-point of books or larger sections, pointed out other statistical information and contained concordance-like lists." Ref-0841, p. 11.

Hebrew grammar - masorah finalis : ☉ + "The Masorah Finalis is the body of Masoretic lists introduced at the end of individual biblical books in the first printed editions of the Masorah. They contain alphabetized lists of data for which the margin of the corresponding page had no room." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 pp. 4:805-814, p. 4:809. "The term Mf also refers to the edited lists collected by Jacob ben Chayyim which are found at the end of the Second Rabbinic Bible . . ." Ref-0842, p. 1.

Hebrew grammar - masorah magna : ☉ + "The Masorah Magna (Large Masorah) refers to the body of information contained in the upper and lower margins of the early MSS. This masorah is essentially an expansion of the material contained in condensed format in the Masorah Parva." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 pp. 4:805-814, p. 4:809. "The masora magna are not included in the same volume as the BHS text, but are published in a separate volume titled Massorah Gedolah. It consists mostly of lists of words somewhat resembling a concordance. Beginning or intermediate students will rarely find it useful. Entry to the Mm [Mm = masorah magna] from the text is through the Mp [Mp = masorah parva]. A circle over a word directs you to the Mp. At the end of the Mp note, if there is a small raised numeral, it directs you to the appropriate note below the page of text (but above the BHS critical apparatus which is at the very bottom of the page). This not usually directs you to a particular list in Massorah Gedolah. As an example, on the first page of the text of BHS, in Gen. 1:5, there is a small "12" after the first Mp note for that line. Looking below the text we are referred to Mm list number 3105, which can be found in Massorah Gedolah, and which lists the seven places in the Hebrew Bible in which the word לְאֹרֶר occurs. . . . Note . . . that . . . the discussion in BHS refers to three volumes of Massorah Gedolah, only the first volume was ever published. Therefore, if the note in the Mp is not indexed to one of the lists in vol. 1 of Massorah Gedolah, you will find the note sub loco at the bottom of the page above the critical apparatus. This simply means that a masoretic note occurs at that place. It was supposed to be discussed in the never published third volume of Massorah Gedolah. According to the editor of the BHS masora, these notes pose "no special problems of form or content." Ref-0841, pp. 16-17. "The reader needs to be aware that the Mm lists in the original manuscript of L [the Leningrad Codex] are written in the upper and lower margins of the pages, not in a separate volume." Ref-0842, p. 8. However, the Mm in L lack the improvements, such as the addition of chapter and verse notation, provided by Weil's Massorah Gadolah.

Hebrew grammar - masorah parva : "These are found on the outside margins of BHS . . . They are mostly written in Aramaic (with some Hebrew) and have been considerably supplemented beyond those found in Codex Leningradensis, which is the manuscript whose text is reproduced in BHS. . . . For the beginning or intermediate student, their most immediately useful purpose is to point out q^{re} The small circles above the words in the text identify the portion of the text which is addressed by the Mp alongside that line." Ref-0841, pp. 11-12. "Mp notes mark features in the text where an error could easily be made. Many Mp notes for example, pertain to vowel letters, which are sometimes present (plene) and sometimes absent (defective), yielding different spellings for the same word. In such cases, the Mp parks the traditional spelling so that a letter will not be accidentally inserted or deleted where it might not be noticed otherwise." Ref-0842, p. 46.

Hebrew grammar - metheg : ☉ + "The metheg (also called ga'yā or ma'arik) is a short vertical stroke under the word. . . . There appears to be no significant difference between metheg to right or left of the vowel. Most often the metheg indicates a secondary stress in the word, but may also be used to indicate that the vowel should be fully pronounced and the pronunciation of the syllable should be slowed down. (The word ma'arik means "lengthener," ga'yā means "raising" of the voice and metheg means "bridle.") Metheg is a helpful clue to identifying two ambiguous vowel forms. The presence of metheg distinguishes qāmeš from qāmeš hātūp (since the latter can not occur in a stressed syllable). [However, note a few exceptions in Gesenius section 9v.] Similarly, the presence of metheg is an indication that what appears to be a simple hîreq is actually a defectively written naturally long hîreq (Gesenius sections 9g and 16i)." Ref-0841, p. 6. "Do not confused metheg with sillūq. Sillūq is similar in appearance, but always appears on the last accented syllable of a verse." Ref-0841, p. 7. "The Metheg makes the reader pause (pp. 7 f.) and leave the syllable open, so that the vowel is in an open syllable and therefore qā." Ref-0128, p. 13.

Hebrew grammar - negation : ☉ + "Imperfect verbs are usually negated with the negative particle לֹא. In addition to this use, the negative particle לֹא may be used before an Imperfect verb to express an absolute or permanent prohibition. The negative particle לֹא before an Imperfect is used to express an immediate and specific prohibition [which may not be permanent]." Ref-0184, p. 171.

Hebrew grammar - number - endings : Hebrew grammar - gender★

Hebrew grammar - numbers : ☉ + "While cardinal number one functions like an adjective, numbers two and higher function like nouns. Note that numbers three through ten do not agree in gender with the noun to which they are related. Cardinal numbers eleven through nineteen are formed with a combination of the number ten and one through nine. For example, the Hebrew number eleven is אֶחָד עָשָׂר . . . Ordinal numbers are classified as adjectives and have both masculine and feminine forms.

Masculine ordinals end in י, as with שְׁלִישִׁי (third) and feminine ordinals end in ית as with שְׁלִישִׁית (third)." Ref-0184, pp. 116-117.

"Nos. 15 and 16 are not denoted by יה and יז since these combinations represent forms of the divine name (YH and YW representing YAH and YO). No. 15 is therefore designated by טו (6 + 9) and 16 by טז (7 + 9)." Ref-0128, p. 2.

Hebrew grammar - particle - interrogative : ☉ "In addition to the interrogative pronouns . . . Hebrew also has an interrogative particle. In Hebrew, questions are not created with punctuation as in English (?). Rather, interrogative clauses (sentences asking a question) are created with the use of certain interrogative pronouns or with a form of the particle הֲ prefixed to the first word of the sentence. . . . הֲשַׁלַּח הַמֶּלֶךְ אֶת-הַנְּבִיאַ = "Did the king send the prophet?" . . . The spelling of the particle will change, depending on the spelling of the form to which it is prefixed. The rules are quite simple: 1. Prefixed to most consonants, it is הֲ as in the example above. 2. Prefixed to a guttural consonant or any consonant with Shewa, it is normally הַ [which looks like the definite article, but without a daghesh]. 3. Prefixed to a guttural consonant followed by Qamets, the spelling of the particle is הָ. . . . The interrogative particle does not normally have an associated Daghesh Forte as does the definite article. . . . With some frequency the interrogative particle will be prefixed to a verbal form or another particle. Verbs and particles . . . will not take the definite article." Ref-0184, pp. 75-76.

Hebrew grammar - pasiq : ☉ + "The pasēq or pasīq is a vertical stroke which separates two words. Although not properly an accent, it is related to the accentual system in that it signifies that a pause should be made in the reading (pasēq means "divider") and that it may affect the accentuation and/or the pointing of the second word." Ref-0841, p. 5.

Hebrew grammar - piel stem : ☉ + a) Piel usually expresses an intensive or intentional action. qal = he broke. piel = he broke to pieces, he smashed. b) Sometimes the Piel introduces a new meaning to the Qal form. qal = he counted. piel = he recounted, he told. c) Piel expresses a repeated or extended action. qal = he jumped. piel = he skipped, he hopped. d) Some intransitive verbs in Qal become transitive in Piel. qal = to be strong. piel = to strengthen, to fortify. Ref-0178

Hebrew grammar - pluralization : ☉ + Singular: masculine nouns have no additional ending whereas feminine nouns typically end in ת, תַּ, or הַ, but may have no additional ending on occasion (e.g., אֲרָץ). Dual: both masculine and feminine nouns end with יַם.

Plural: masculine nouns end in ים and feminine nouns end in ות. "In a very few instances, singular nouns of one gender take the plural endings of the other gender. . . . the plural of אֵב is אֵבוֹת. . . . There are three special Hebrew words . . . that are always dual in form. They are שְׁמוֹנִים . . . מִצְרַיִם . . . מַיִם . . . Some Hebrew nouns will alter their actual (consonantal) stem when they add their plural endings. . . . For example, . . . the plural of אִישׁ (man) is אֲנָשִׁים (men) . . . Occasionally the feminine plural ending ות will be spelled וֹת. . . . The shorter spelling is called "defective spelling" or "defective writing." Ref-0184, pp. 29-31.

Hebrew grammar - pluralization - propretonic reduction : ☉ + "Two-syllable nouns that are accented on the final syllable and have either Qamets or Tere in the first or pretonic syllable will experience what is called "propretonic reduction" with the addition of plural endings. . . . the Qamets or Tere is placed in an open, propretonic syllable . . . [and] reduce to a Shewa . . . דְּבָרִים --> דְּבַר . . . Nouns with an initial guttural consonant cannot take a vocal Shewa . . . they prefer Hataf Pathach . . . עֲנָנִים --> עֲנַן." Ref-0184, pp. 29-31.

Hebrew grammar - pluralization - Segholate nouns : ☉ + "While the vowel patterns of Segholate nouns will vary in the singular, they will always have the same vowel pattern in the plural. . . . מְלָכִים --> מְלָכִיךָ . . . Gutturals cannot take a vocal Shewa . . . they will take a reduced vowel, usually Hataf Pathach." Ref-0184, p. 33.

Hebrew grammar - preposition - min : ☉ +

When מִן occurs as an inseparable preposition the ך of the preposition assimilates into the first consonant of the noun to which it is prefixed and represented by a daghesh forte in that consonant: מִן-מֶלֶךְ --> מִמֶּלֶךְ. When prefixing a begadkephat consonant, the daghesh lene converts to a daghesh forte. When prefixed to a word beginning with a guttural consonant, the guttural rejects the daghesh forte and the hireq of the ך prefix compensates by lengthening to ך. When prefixing a word beginning with ך, the daghesh forte is rejected, but without any compensatory lengthening. This is referred to as virtual doubling. Ref-0184, pp. 52-53. This preposition has several special uses: (1)

Comparative Use. תוֹכַחַת הַצִּמְחָה מִזָּהָב = "wisdom is good from gold," meaning "wisdom is better than gold" or קָשָׁה הָעֵדָה מִהָאֲנָשִׁים = "the work is difficult from the men," meaning "the work is too difficult for the men." (2)

Superlative Use. Used with צָל (all, each, every): עָרוֹם מִצֵּל חַיֵּי הַשָּׂדֶה = "clever from every living thing of the field," meaning "the most clever living thing of the field." (3)

Partitive Use. Used to express a part or portion of something: מִהָאֲנָשִׁים = "some of the men." Ref-0184, pp. 53-54.

Hebrew grammar - prepositions : ☉ + There are three types of prepositions: (1)

Independent prepositions. The prepositions stands alone: לְפָנַי הַמֶּלֶךְ; (2) Maqqef Prepositions. The preposition is joined to the following word by a raised horizontal stroke called a Maqqef: לְ-הָאֲבִן; (3) Inseparable Prepositions. The preposition is prefixed directly to the object: בְּשֵׂדֶה. There are four syntax variations of inseparable preposition:

(a) Before most consonants, the inseparable prepositions will appear with vocal shewa (see preceding example). (b) Before a reduced or hateph vowel, the inseparable preposition take the corresponding short vowel: בְּצִאֲנָשִׁים. (c) Before consonants with a vocal shewa, inseparable prepositions are spelled with hireq (two side-by-side vocal shewas cannot stand at the beginning of a word): לְבִרְיָה. (d) (3) Partitive Use. Used to express a part or portion of something: מִהָאֲנָשִׁים = "some of the men." Ref-0184, pp. 53-54.) Before nouns with the definite article, the vowel and daghesh forte of the definite article are retained but the consonant of the preposition replaces the ך of the definite article: שְׂדֵה --> בְּשֵׂדֶה --> בְּשֵׂדֶה. Ref-0184, pp. 50-52.

"Before ך the inseparable preposition is pointed with Hireq and the shewa under the ך falls away, thus: Judah יְהוּדָה to to Judah לְיְהוּדָה. . . . Another special case is when the inseparable preposition is prefixed to a word whose first letter (is a guttural which) has a composite shewa, as in אֲרִי 'a lion'. The combination לְאֲרִי is of course impossible (since two shewas cannot stand together at the beginning of a word) so, under the influence of the composite shewa the inseparable preposition assumes the corresponding short vowel: a lion אֲרִי to a lion לְאֲרִי. . . . An exception is the word אֱלֹהִים 'God'. The combination is first אֱלֹהִים but the א quiesces and loses its consonantal character . . . it becomes silent, thus . . . לְאֱלֹהִים." Ref-0128, p. 27-28. "When the inseparable preposition is followed by the article, e.g. 'to the king' (which we would expect to be לְהַמֶּלֶךְ), the ך of the article (is scarcely audible and, in fact) falls away, surrendering its vowel to the preposition, thus: לְהַמֶּלֶךְ." Ref-0128, p. 28. "SUMMARY: (A) The inseparable prepositions ל, ב, צ are pointed: 1. Normally with shewa: לְהַמֶּלֶךְ. 2. Before a shewa they take Hireq: לְשֵׂמוֹאֵל. 3. Before ך they take Hireq, but the shewa under the ך falls away: לְיְהוּדָה. 4. Before a composite shewa they assume the corresponding short vowel: לְאֲרִי. 5. Before אֱלֹהִים they take Şere and the composite shewa under the א disappears: לְאֱלֹהִים. 6. Before יְהוּדָה they follow 5 with the vowels of the Qere: לְיְהוּדָה. 7. Before the tone syllable they often take Qames: לְשֵׂבֶת. (B) When these inseparable prepositions are followed by the article, the ך of the article disappears and the prepositions assume its pointing: לְהַמֶּלֶךְ, לְהָאֵם, לְעֶפְרַיִם. (C) When the preposition becomes inseparable, then: 1. Before ordinary letters (excluding the gutturals and ר) it is ך followed by Dagheš Forte: מִמֶּלֶךְ. 2. Before gutturals and ר it is ך, מִמֶּלֶךְ, מִמֶּלֶךְ. 3. Before the article it is ך, as in 2, and the article remains intact: מִהַמֶּלֶךְ." Ref-0128, p. 30. "When the prepositions ב-צ- and ל- are attached to a word with ך, the following changes take place: 1) The ך is dropped; 2) Any vowel that appeared under the ך () is transferred to the preposition; 3) Any dagesh that appeared in the first letter following the ך is preserved." Ref-0738, p. 44.

Hebrew grammar - pronominal suffix : ☉ "In Hebrew, these possessive and objective pronouns appear as suffixes on nouns, prepositions and the definite direct object marker. When appearing on nouns, they are possessive as in "his book" or "her wisdom." When appearing on prepositions or the definite direct object marker, they are objective as in "to them," "for them," or "them." Ref-0184, p. 81. Type 1 suffixes occur with singular nouns and type two suffixes occur with plural nouns and include ך, type 1 ך becomes type 1 ךָ | 1cs = ך = my/me, alternate form: ךי | 2ms = ך = your/you | 2fs = ךי = uour/you | 3ms = ך = his/him, alternate form: ךו | 3fs = ךו = her/her, alternate form: ךה | 1cp = ךו = our/us | 2mp = ךם = your/you | 2fp = ךן = your/you | 3mp = ךם = their/them, alternate form: ך, | 3fp = ךן = their/them, alternate form: ךן, Ref-0184, p. 82. "Be careful to note the important distinction between the 1cs suffixes on singular and plural nouns: סוּסִי (my horse) and סוּסֵי (my horses). With the singular noun, the suffix is Hireq Yod. With the plural noun, the suffix is Pathach Yod." Ref-0184, p. 84. "Nouns ending in ך will frequently drop this ending before adding pronominal suffixes. For example, שְׂדֵה (field) becomes שְׂדֵךְ (your field) or שְׂדֵךְ (my field). In order to locate these nouns in a lexicon, you must be able to recognize that the ך ending has been dropped." Ref-0184, p. 84. "When a feminine singular noun ending in ך (as in תוֹרָה) receives a pronominal suffix, the ך is replaced by ך. In other words, the feminine singular noun תוֹרָה becomes תוֹרָת before receiving a pronominal suffix." Ref-0184, p. 85. "Unlike masculine plural nouns, feminine plural nouns retain their plural ending (וֹת). Ref-0184, p. 85. "Certain singular monosyllabic nouns will add ך (appears as Hireq Yod with Type 1 suffixes) to their stem before a pronominal suffix [and may be easily confused as type 2 endings on a plural noun] (אָח, "brother" becomes אָחִיךָ, "your brother" [singular, even with yod]). Ref-0184, p. 92. "Be careful not to confuse the object marker with the preposition אֶת- / אֵת meaning "with." . . . these two words can be distinguished by their vowels after pronominal suffixes have been added. The object marker is distinguished by a Holem vowel over the initial consonant (אֵת). It is Seghol in the 2mp and 2fp forms (אֶתְכֶם). The preposition is distinguished by the presence of a Hireq vowel under the initial consonant (אֶתִי). The preposition also has a Dagheš Forte in the ך." Ref-0184, p. 90. "Pronominal suffixes are possessive (my, his, her) when appearing on nouns and objective (me, him, her) when appearing on prepositions." Ref-0184, p. 91.

Hebrew grammar - pronoun - interrogative :

☉ "In Hebrew, the main interrogative pronouns are מִי (who? whom?) and מַה (what?) These pronouns do not inflect and can appear with or without the Maqqef. . . . מַה שְׂמוֹ = "What (is) his name?" " Ref-0184, p. 75.

Hebrew grammar - pronoun - personal : ☉

"The second and third person pronouns have masculine and feminine forms . . . First person pronouns, however, are common . . . they are not inflected for gender. In Hebrew, independent personal pronouns are subjective, meaning they are used as the subject of a verb, never as the object of the verb." Ref-0184, p. 70.

Hebrew grammar - pronoun - relative : ☉ "In Hebrew, the word אֲשֶׁר functions as the relative pronoun. The form of the word never changes. . . . In addition to אֲשֶׁר, the particle שֶׁ also functions as a relative pronoun . . . Like the definite article, it is prefixed to a word with a Dagheš Forte in the first consonant (when possible) as in שְׂתוֹב (who is good)." Ref-0184, p. 74.

Hebrew grammar - pronunciation : ☉ + "The pronunciation of modern or Israeli Hebrew differs in a number of ways from what is considered to be the traditional or ancient pronunciation. The most notable differences involve the pronunciation of ך ך ך. With the three begadkephat consonants, the forms without Dagesh Lene are pronounced just like the forms with Dagesh Lene (hard) in modern Hebrew.” Ref-0184 p. 7. ך is pronounced vav rather than waw.

Hebrew grammar - pronunciation - modern vs. biblical : ☉ + Modern Hebrew pronounces the three begadkephat consonants ך ם ן as if they were always hard. ך is produced 'v' as in 'vine.' See Ref-0184, p. 7.

Hebrew grammar - qal - imperfect - strong verb : ☉ + | person-gender-number/preformative/sufformative/imperfect/translation | 3ms/ / - / יִקְטֹל /he will kill | 3fs/ / - / תִּקְטֹל /she will kill | 2ms/ / / יִקְטֹל /you will kill | 2fs/ / / יִקְטֹל /you will kill | 1cs/ / / אֶקְטֹל /I will kill | 3mp/ / / יִקְטֹלוּ /they will kill | 3fp/ / / תִּקְטֹלוּ /they will kill | 2mp/ / / יִקְטֹלוּ /you (all) will kill | 2fp/ / / תִּקְטֹלוּ /you (all) will kill | 1cp/ / / נִקְטֹל /we will kill | The Imperfect conjugation is used to express incomplete action and is usually translated by the English present tense (I study) or future tense (I will study). The action of the verb occurs either at the time of speaking or after the time of speaking. The Hebrew Imperfect is also used to denote habitual or customary action, whether in the past, present or future (he prays regularly, he used to pray). The Imperfect may also be rendered by one of several modal values (would, could, should, may, might, can, etc.). These modal translation values are suggested by context and various issues of syntax. It must also be emphasized that, like the Perfect, the Hebrew Imperfect does not have tense (time of action) apart from context and issues of syntax. It too signifies aspect (type of action). The Imperfect aspect designates a verbal action for which, in the mind of the speaker or writer, the conclusion is not in view. To state it differently, the Imperfect aspect denotes incomplete action, whether in the past, present, or future. The imperfect conjugation is called the prefix conjugation because inflectional prefixes called preformatives are added to all Imperfect verbal forms. In the Qal, all preformative consonants have the Hireq vowel, except the 1cs form which has Seghol (אֶקְטֹל). The preformatives and sufformatives of the Qal Imperfect are the same for all Imperfect forms in the derived stems, strong and weak verbs. The stem vowel is Holem, except in those forms that have sufformatives that consist of a vowel (2fs, 3mp and 2mp), wherein the Holem stem vowel is reduced to a vocal Shewa. With some frequency in the Hebrew Bible, the 3mp and 2mp forms will be written with a final ך as in יִקְטֹלוּךְ or תִּקְטֹלוּךְ. This final ך is called Nun Paragogicum. Verbs with this final Nun may also be spelled defectively (meaning that the vowel letter Shureq is written as Qibbutz). | The common vowel pattern for Qal Imperfect strong verbs is 0=hireq/2=holem (0 denotes preformative). Ref-0184, pp. 165-167.

Hebrew grammar - qal - perfect - strong verb : ☉ + | person-gender-number/sufformative/perfect/translation | 3ms/ / / הִקְטִיל /he killed | 3fs/ / / הִקְטִילָה

הִקְטִילָה /she killed | 2ms/ / / הִקְטִילְתָּ /you killed | 2fs/ / / הִקְטִילְתְּ /you killed | 1cs/ / / הִקְטִילְתִּי /I killed | 3cp/ / / הִקְטִילוּ /they killed | 2mp/ / / הִקְטִילְתֶּם /you (all) killed | 2fp/ / / הִקְטִילְתֶּן /you (all) killed | 1cp/ / / הִקְטִילְנוּ /we killed | “Note the presence of the Metheg in the 3fs (הִקְטִילָה) and 3cp (הִקְטִילוּ) forms which serves to identify the vowel as Qamets and not Qamets Hatuf.” Hence, there is a pause in the pronunciation as qa-te-lah and not qot-lah. The shewa could otherwise be taken as silent. Also note that when sufformatives append to verbal roots ending in ך or ן resulting in the duplication of the final root consonant (וּכְתַבְתָּ or ןַכְתַּבְתָּ) or the combination ןַת, then one of the two consonants assimilates into the other as a dagesh forte. תַּת --> תַּתְּ, ןַן --> ןַןְּ, נַת --> נַתְּ. Ref-0184, pp. 140-142. The common vowel pattern for Qal Perfect strong verbs is 1=Qamets/2=Pathach. Ref-0184, p. 140.

Hebrew grammar - qal - perfect - weak verbs : ☉ + I-Guttural/II-Guttural Paradigm:

Since a guttural cannot take a vocal shewa, the vocal shewa under the weak vowel changes to the reduced a-vowel (Hateph Pathach). Ref-0184, p. 150. III-ה / ע Paradigm: Follows the strong verb paradigm except that the silent shewa under the guttural of the 2fs form changes to Pathach (e.g., הִשְׁמַעְתָּ --> הִשְׁמַעְתָּ). Ref-0184, p. 151. III-א / ה Paradigm: The verb pattern is 1=Qamets/2=Qamets. In III-א, the dagesh lene normally in the initial consonant of the five sufformatives beginning with ך, is absent because the א quiesces in pronunciation. The ך is preceded by a vowel sound and loses the dagesh lene. Since the א has no vowel, it is not pronounced. The III-ה loses the final ך root consonant in every form of the perfect. III-ה verbs were originally III-ׁ and the stem vowel of a form like הִשְׁמַעְתָּ is reminiscent of the original conjugation in the third root position. In the Qal conjugation, the Hireq Yod stem vowel will help identify the III-ה class of verbs. Ref-0184, pp. 153-154. Doubly Weak Paradigm: A doubly weak verb will combine the spelling variations of its two weak consonants. Geminate Verb Paradigm: Verbs of this class have identical second and third root consonants as in ךַּכְּכַּב meaning “to go around.” Verbs of this type exhibit two major changes: (1) in most forms, the first Geminate consonant assimilates into the second and is represented as a Dagesh Forte; (2) there is the insertion of a connecting vowel (Holem Waw - ם) between the verbal root and the sufformative. Biconsonantal Verb Paradigm: As the name indicates, these verbs are composed of two consonants. Examples include ךַּקַּם (to rise), ןַשַּׁם (to set, put) and ןַקַּע (to enter). They are also called “hollow” or II-ׁ / ן verbs. These designations reflect the fact that in some conjugations, these verbs exhibit a medial vowel letter which is absent in the perfect conjugation. Although biconsonantal verbs are considered weak, a “strong” biconsonantal verb is one without a guttural consonant (e.g., ןַקַּם). Ref-0184, pp.

Hebrew grammar - qamets vs. qamets hatuf : ☉ + The qamets hatuf only occurs in closed and unaccented syllables. The qamets prefers an open, pretonic, syllable or a closed, accented syllable. Where a metheg occurs, it marks the vowel as a qamets. Ref-0184, p. 21. “If the vowel sign occurs in a closed unaccented syllable it must be short and is therefore short 'o' = Qamets Hatuf.” Ref-0128, p. 12.

Hebrew grammar - qere vs. kethibh : ☉ + “Probably the most significant body of information contained in the Masorah Parva ? at least from the point of view of modern text-critical scholarship ? has to do with the category of entry known as the qere/kethibh. In more than 1300 instances the Masoretes indicated that a word should be read (qere) differently from the way it was written (kethibh) in the consonantal text, the latter being sacrosanct and unalterable. Some of the important types of qere readings are the euphemistic replacement of strong language, modernization of archaic, unusual or defective forms, correction of presumed errors such as metathesis, omission and addition of letters, changes in the division of words, and the substitution of whole words. A few words have a form known as the qere perpetuum since they are not noted in the margins but are always read in a way different from the text, e.g., the substitution of Adonai (“my Lord”) for the sacred name Yahweh (the Tetragrammaton or Four Letters).” S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 pp. 4:805-814, p. 4:809. “In instances where the consonantal text was felt to be unsatisfactory or where textual variants were deemed to be worthy of preservation, the masoretes (who were bound not to alter the consonantal text) provided the consonants of the word to be read in the margin. The vowel points for the word to be read were then placed under the consonants written in the text. This can result in strange looking words if you don't remember that the vowel points under the כִּי־יִבְּ belong to another word. . . . Because the masoretes intended that the q̄rê form be automatically read without hesitation, the Mp for q̄rê is a distinctive two-tiered arrangement that enhances recognition. A q̄p with a dot above it . . . which is the abbreviation for q̄rê . . . will be below the word(s) to be read in the margin. . . . Perpetual Q̄rê. There are a few words which were intended to be read differently than the consonantal text throughout the Hebrew Bible or portions of it. Individual q̄rê notes in the Mp are not provided for each occurrence of these words, but the vowel points are provided in the text.” Ref-0841, p. 13. The two most important perpetual q̄rê are (written/read) אֲדֹנָי / יְהוָה, אֲדֹנָי / יְהוָה. See Ref-0841, p. 14 for the complete list which includes 4 additional words.

Hebrew grammar - quiescent - aleph : ☉ + “When א occurs without a vowel, it is quiescent as in אִתְּאָה (sin). When the א is quiescent, it is not considered to be consonant with reference to the rules of syllabification. This word should be divided as אִתְּאָה.” Ref-0184, p. 22. “The consonant aleph (א) in early Hebrew always had the sound of a glottal stop (. . . the sound heard in the middle of "uh-oh"). In modern Israeli Hebrew, though, it normally has no sound at all, although in certain circumstances the glottal stop will still be heard." Ref-1162, p. 56.

Hebrew grammar - quiescent - ayin : ☉ + "The original sound of ayin (א) was a pharyngeal (in the pharynx) fricative, but in Modern Hebrew it is treated very much like the aleph (i.e., it is not pronounced or has the sound between "uh-oh")." Ref-1162, p. 57.

Hebrew grammar - quiescent letters :
Hebrew grammar - quiescent letters ☉ + "The letters אָדָר are so feeble (in pronunciation) that, under certain conditions, they lose their consonantal character and quiesce, i.e. they become silent. Hence they are called Quiescent Letters." Ref-0128, p. 18.

Hebrew grammar - raphe : ☉ + "... a letter is sometimes doubled for smoother pronunciation, in which case it has a Dagheš Forte Euphonic. Conversely, for the same reason, the doubling of a letter is sometimes omitted and Dagheš Forte is dropped, in which case a short horizontal line, called רַפֵּה Rāp̄he (?soft) appears over the letter." Ref-0128, pp. 17-18. (Unfortunately, it appears that the BSTHebrew character set which we have been making use of to enter Hebrew text does not contain a raphe character.)

Hebrew grammar - root - stem : ☉ + "A root represents the origin or simplest form from which any number of Hebrew words are derived. From a root therefore, any number of nouns or verbs may be derived. A stem is the most basic form of any word derived from a root. For example, from the triconsonantal root מִלְכָּה comes the noun stems מֶלֶךְ (king), מַלְכָּה (queen), מַמְלֻכָּה (kingdom), and the verb מִלְכָּה (to reign, be king)." Ref-0184, pp. 121-122.

Hebrew grammar - Segholate nouns : ☉ + "All two-syllable nouns that are accented on the first syllable are classified as Segholate nouns. . . . They are called Segholate nouns because they typically have to Seghol vowels as in the following examples: מֶלֶךְ . . . Other vowel patterns also appear in this class, usually with at least one Seghol vowel as in the following examples: מֶלֶךְ . . . סֶפֶר . . . בֶּקֶר . . ." Ref-0184, p. 33.

Hebrew grammar - shewa - composite : ☉ + "Composite shewa אָ אָ אָ replaces vocal shewa under the guttural letters (אָדָהּ)." Ref-0128, p. 11. "When two simple shewas occur together at the beginning of a word, the first becomes the short vowel Hireq (); before a composite shewa the simple vocal shewa becomes the corresponding short vowel." Ref-0128, p. 11.

Hebrew grammar - shewa - dagesh : ☉ + "Shewa under a letter doubled by a dot (Dagheš Forte) . . . is vocal." Ref-0128, p. 11.

Hebrew grammar - shewa - guttural : ☉ + Gutturals can only take a silent shewa. Ref-0184, p. 24.

Hebrew grammar - shewa - preposition rule 1 : ☉ + Prepending a preposition with a vocal shewa to a word which begins with a vocal shewa would produce two vocal shewas in a row which is not allowed. To avoid this problem, the two side-by-side shewas become a hireq: לְ + נְבִיאִים --> לְנְבִיאִים. If the word being prefixed begins with the syllable הָ, then the two shewas combine to form a hireq yod: לְ + הַיְהוּדָה --> לְהַיְהוּדָה. Ref-0184, pp. 38-39.

Hebrew grammar - shewa - preposition rule 2 : ☉ + A Vocal Shewa cannot precede a guttural with a reduced vowel. When a preposition is added to a guttural with a reduced vowel, the preposition takes the corresponding short vowel of the reduced vowel: בְּ הַלָּוִים --> בְּהַלָּוִים. Ref-0184, pp. 39. "When two simple shewas occur together at the beginning of a word, the first becomes the short vowel Hireq (); before a composite shewa the simple vocal shewa becomes the corresponding short vowel." Ref-0128, p. 11.

Hebrew grammar - shewa - vocal vs. silent : ☉ + The shewa is silent if: 1. it immediately follows a short vowel (ending a closed syllable). Immediately excludes a preceding doubled consonant as when following a dagheš forte (in which case a doubled consonant with shewa acts as a silent shewa closing the preceding consonant and a vocal shewa under the next); 2. it is the first of two side-by-side shewas; 3. it is at the end of a word. Ref-0184, p. 20. See also Ref-0128, pp. 9-10.

Hebrew grammar - stem vowel : ☉ + "The stem vowel is the vowel that is associated with the second root consonant. For example, in the strong verb paradigms . . . the stem vowel is Pathach as in קָטַל, שָׁמַר, and וָצַר." Ref-0184, p. 143.

Hebrew grammar - suffix conjugation : ☉ + The suffix (perfective) conjugation doesn't indicated completed action, but a complete situation. It represents a situation as a single whole, and does not convey internal details. Ref-0157, p. 479.

Hebrew grammar - superlative : ☉ + "Perhaps the most common superlative construction is created by the use of an adjective that has been made definite by the definite article, a pronominal suffix or the construct state. . . . not all "definite" adjectives will translate as superlatives but context will suggest the possibility. מִן־הַקְּטָן וְעַד־הַגָּדוֹל (literally) "from the small one to the great one" or (superlatively) "from the smallest one to the greatest one" (1S. 30:19). Another superlative construction consists of two nouns in the construct state where the construct noun is singular and the absolute noun is plural or definite. In this construction, the two nouns must be the same. קִדְשׁ הַקֳּדָשִׁים "the holy of holies," meaning the most holy place (Ex. 26:33)." Ref-0184, pp. 109-110.

Hebrew grammar - syllabification - aleph : ☉ + When אָ is quiescent (has no vowel), it is not considered a consonant with reference to the rules of syllabification. Ref-0184, p. 22.

Hebrew grammar - syllabification - diphthong : ☉ + Syllables that contain the diphthong (אָי) are considered to be closed. Ref-0184, p. 24.

Hebrew grammar - syllabification - quiescent aleph : Hebrew grammar - quiescent - aleph ☉

Hebrew grammar - syllable classification : ☉ + The tonic is not necessarily the last syllable, but the syllable which receives the accent. The pretonic and propretonic are located in relation to the accented syllable. The alternative classification system, ultima, penultima, antepenultima, differs in that it is based strictly on position last, next-to-last, and next-to-next-to-last syllable, without regard for the position of the accent. Unlike the dagēš lene which merely hardens the begadkephat consonants, the dagēš forte affects syllabification because it doubles the consonant. Ref-0184, pp. 18-19.

Hebrew grammar - tense : ☉ + "There are really no "tenses" as such in Hebrew. Rather, actions are viewed from two standpoints, either completed (perfect) or uncompleted (imperfect). These are better called "aspects" than tenses." Ref-0819, p. 81.

Hebrew grammar - tense - augment : ☉ + "Augment. In the indicative the tenses which refer to past time have an augment, and are called secondary tenses. There are two kinds of augment. a. Syllabic augment is the prefixing of ε to the verbs beginning with a consonant: e.g., ἔλυον. b. Temporal augment is used in the case of verbs beginning with a vowel, and is the lengthening of the initial vowel; e.g., ἀκούω, ἤκουον. . . . c. A few verbs appear with both the temporal and syllabic augments, as μέλλω, ἤμελλον; ἀνοίγω, ἀνώφεξα." Ref-0957, p. 47.

Hebrew grammar - tense - stem endings : ☉ + "Formation of Tense Stems. In the normal, regular tense stem the primary distinguishing element is an affixed consonant which we call a stem ending. The two other features employed in distinguishing tense functions are augment and reduplication. The ordinary Greek verb presents four characteristic stem endings. | a. The future has σ, with the connecting vowels ο/ε; e.g., λύσω, λύσομεν, λύσετε. | b. the aorist active and middle has σ, with the connecting vowel α; e.g., ἔλυσα, ἐλύσαμεν, ἐλύσατε. | c. The passive has θε, which is actual inflection usually appears as θη; e.g., ἐλύθην, λυθήσομαι. | d. The perfect active has κα; e.g., λέλυκα. | e. The perfect middle and passive has no distinctive ending, but attaches the verbal suffix (personal ending) directly to the reduplicated stem; e.g., λέλυμαι, λέλυσαι, λέλυται, etc." Ref-0957, p. 44. "Verb stems which end in a consonant present important changes in their combination with the stem ending. As an aid to the student in constructing verb forms we insert here a table of these consonant changes . . ." Ref-0957, pp. 45-47.

Hebrew grammar - verbs - strong and weak : ☉ + “Strong verbs have no weak consonants. The weak consonants are the gutturals and ה. For example, the verbs קָטַל, קָטַב, and קָבַץ are strong verbs and שָׁמַע, מָצָא, and עָלָה are weak verbs. The consonants ך and ך are also considered weak but only when they appear as the first consonant of the verbal root as in שָׁבַע and שָׁבַע and only in certain conjugations. Biconsonantal and Geminate verbal roots are also considered to be weak. Biconsonantal roots have two rateh than three root consonants as in קָם (he arose). Geminate roots are those in which the second and third root consonants are identical as in קָבַע (he surrounded). . . . | I-Guttural: עָמַד guttural in first root position. | II-Guttural: נָאֵל guttural in second root position. | III: עָרַח / עָרַח / עָרַח in third root position. | III: אָמַע in third root position. | III: הָבַע in third root position. | I: יָשַׁב in first root position. | I: נָפַל in first root position. | Doubly Weak: עָלָה I-Guttural and III-ה. |

Hebrew grammar - vowel classes : ☉ + “the Hebrew vowels are presented in four major classes: short, changeable long [marked by macron, e.g., ā], unchangeable long [marked by carrot, e.g., â, and reduced [marked by circumflex, e.g., ä.” Ref-0184, p. 9. “Short vowels prefer either closed, unaccented syllables or open accented syllables. . . . Long vowels (changeable or unchangeable) prefer either closed, accented syllables or open, pretonic syllables. . . . Vocal shewa and reduced (hateph) vowels prefer open, prepretonic syllables.” Ref-0184, pp. 26-27. Hateph (פִּתּוּחַ) means “hurried.” Ref-0128, p. 10.

Hebrew grammar - vowel letters : ☉ + The following consonantal letters are also used to represent vowels: ך ך ך. Ref-0184, p. 12. “However, long before the introduction of vowel signs it was felt that the main vowel-sounds should be indicated in writing, and so the three letters ך ך were used to represent the long vowels, thus: ך represents â, so that מָה reads mâ. ך represents î or ê, so that מִי reads mî or mê. ך represents û or ô, so that מִו reads mû or mô. Because these three letters--ך--represent both vowels and letters they are known as vowel-letters.” Ref-0128, pp. 6-7.

Hebrew grammar - vowel types : ☉ + “Within the vowel classes see [Hebrew grammar - vowel classes], there are five vowel types (a, e, i, o, u), though not all are attested in each of the vowel classes.” Ref-0184 p. 9. “Originally, there were only three vowel classes in Hebrew: a-class, i-class and u-class. The other vowel classes (e-class and o-class) developed later. The e-class developed from the original i-class and the o-class developed from the original u-class. For this reason, most grammarians prefer to divide Hebrew vowels into three (a, i, u) rather than five (a, e, i, o, u) classes. By doing this, e-class vowels are considered to be a subset of the i-class and o-class vowels are considered to be a subset of the u-class.” Ref-0184 p. 16.

Hebrew grammar - vowels - changeable long : ☉ + | ך = qāmēs = ā | ך = sērê = ē | ך = ḥôl̄m = ō Ref-0184, p. 10

Hebrew grammar - vowels - origin : ☉ + “About the time of the Reformation many held that the vowel marks and other signs in the Hebrew MSS were as old as the consonants. According to popular belief Moses received the signs orally and Ezra reduced them to writing. A contrary view, that the signs were of late invention, had been ventured from time to time in previous centuries, but it was not till the 16th cent that the traditional view was seriously challenged by the erudite Jewish scholar Elias Levita. This challenge sparked a storm of controversy which lasted well into the 18th cent and even became a point of bitter dispute between Catholics and some Protestants. Whereas the early Reformers had welcomed Levita’s refutation of the antiquity of the signs, later Reformation scholars espoused the opposite view when they felt Catholics applied Levita’s views to their own advantage. In Switzerland a law was even passed in 1678 that no person should be licensed to preach the gospel in their churches unless he accepted the integrity of the Hebrew text, including the divine origin of the vowel points and accents! The evidence was based primarily on the lack of knowledge of the signs by either Jerome in the 4th cent or the Talmud in the 5th century. For even though both at times discuss in detail different vocalization possibilities of Hebrew consonants, they never mention any diacritical signs (see Ginsburg, pp. 445-452). It is inconceivable that had such signs existed Jerome and the rabbis should have failed to mention them. Probably they were introduced sometime in the 6th or 7th century.” S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 pp. 4:805-814, p. 4:807. “. . . Levita [Elias Levita, 1468-1549] argued that the vowel points did not originate in antiquity but instead were added by the Masoretes sometime after the close of the Talmud. Levita’s study into the origin of the Masorah was met by a storm of controversy, since it went against the prevailing pious Jewish opinion that the vowel signs either originated at Sinai or were established by Ezra.” “The signs for Hebrew vocalization, although created at a relatively early stage--apparently between the years 500 and 700 CE--were only much later developed into a full-fledged system.” Ref-0954, p. 43. “The main function of the vocalization was to remove doubts regarding the reading of the text when this allowed for more than one interpretation. It was also a necessary component of [the Masoretic Text, MT], since this text was sparing in its use of matres lectionis. . . . which facilitate the reading of the consonants. On the other hand, in such texts as some of the Qumran scrolls, which make abundant use of matres lectionis. . . . vocalization was required less.” Ref-0954, pp. 40-41.

Hebrew grammar - vowels - paused : ☉ + “A word is said to be in pause when its accent is a major stop, i.e. a Sillûq or ’Athnah; in either case the word being at the end of a clause. The tendency, in speech, is to prolong the accented syllable of the last word in a sentence, i.e. when the word is in pause: thus, the word for ‘water’ is מַיִם (mayim) in the middle of a sentence, but in pause it is: מַיִם -- מַיִם (māyim).” Ref-0128, p. 21.

Hebrew grammar - weak verb patterns - qal perfect : ☉ + 1. The perfect suffixatives are retained. 2. Guttural consonants cannot take vocal shewa and will prefer some type of a-vowel, usually Hateph Pathach. 3. With III-X weak verbs, the X is quiescent. This causes the loss of the daghesh lene in the ן of the perfect sufformatives because it is now preceded by a vowel. 4. With III-ן weak verbs, the final ן of the verbal root is lost in all forms of the Qal Perfect paradigm. All second and first person forms of this paradigm have the diagnostic Hireq Yod stem vowel (הִיָּוֹדִי). The daghesh lene in the ן of the perfect sufformatives is lost because this begadkephat consonant is preceded by a vowel (י). 5. Geminate verbs assimilate the first geminate into the second with a resulting daghesh forte in all first and second person forms. The holem waw (ו) connecting vowel is also a diagnostic feature of this weak verb class. As with III-X and III-ן verbs, the daghesh lene of the ן of the perfect sufformative is lost because it is preceded by a vowel. Ref-0184, p. 159.

The distinction, he says, is that "crushing the head and crushing or bruising the heel is the difference between a mortal blow to the skull and a slight injury to the victor." This seems mistaken. Since in the context the tempter has taken the form of a serpent . . . it is likely that the tempter's blow would be equated with a serpent's bite. And in the case of this animal, the Hebrew generally uses it to speak of a venomous and lethal snake. Most likely, therefore, the text is speaking of two comparable death blows: the future redeemer will strike the head of the tempter and thereby kill it, and at the same time the tempter will strike the heel of the redeemer and kill him. . . . it indicates that the woman's seed will indeed have victory, but the victory will be achieved through suffering his own death. This appears to be how the writer of Hebrews understood this verse . . . (Heb. 2:14-15)." Ref-1272, p. 141. Questionable: Ps. 91:12-13 (?);

Rodney Petersen, "Continuity and Discontinuity: The Debate Throughout Church History," Ref-0199, p. 26. "To cite a few examples [of allegorical hermeneutics]: The journey of Abraham from ur of the Chaldees to Haran is interpreted as the imaginary trip of a Stoic philosopher who leaves sensual understanding and arrives at the senses. The two pence given by the Good Samaritan to the innkeeper has the hidden meanings of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The river Euphrates means the outflow of manners and is not an actual literal river in Mesopotamia. Pope Gregory the Great's interpretation of the Book of Job is equally disheartening: 'The patriarch's three friends denote the heretics; his seven sons are the twelve apostles; his seven thousand sheep are God's faithful people; and hsi three thousand hump-backed camels are the deprived Gentiles!'" hermeneutics - allegory - Augustine - John 2:6 : John 2:6 ☩ + "An example of allegorical interpretation from early church history is seen in one of Augustine's sermons on the gospel of John. For He says to him, "And thou shalt make the ark of imperishable wood, and shalt overlay it with pure gold within and without; and thou shalt make the length of it two cubits and a half, and the breadth thereof one cubit and a half, and a cubit and a half the height;" which measures, when summed up together, make five cubits and a half, so that the 5500 years might be signified thereby." Commenting on the 153 fish caught by the disciples (see John 21:11), Westcott summarizes Rupert's interpretation: "Rupert of Deutz . . . regards the three numbers [100, 50, 3] as the proportions of three different classes united in one faith. The 'hundred' are the married, who are the numerous, the 'fifty' the widowed or continent who are less numerous, the 'three,' the least in number are virgins." hermeneutics - authorial intent : ☩ + "But to deduce from these facts that the search for historical meaning is secondary or unimportant--let alone that it is fatuous and hopeless--flies in the face of every human instinct. And that includes the instinct of the most radical reader-response critics themselves, who presumably make every effort to understand authorial meaning if they happen to receive, say, a warning from their landlord, threatening to evict them if they do not pay their rent fairly soon. The whole of our social intercourse is predicated on the assumption that we will be courteous enough to avoid, insofar as that is possible, interpreting what someone says in ways not intended by that speaker." Ref-0838, p. 122.

hermeneutics - Christocentric : ☩ + ". . . the focus on being exclusively Christocentric [in interpretation] in fact necessitates a dual rather than a singular hermeneutic. That is, there is a broad agreement that the NT should be interpreted by means of a literal, grammatical, historical, contextual hermeneutic whereby the person of Christ is expounded from the text. However, we are also told that this hermeneutic is not to be consistently applied to the OT as well. Rather, according to Augustinianism, a distinctive Christocentric method of interpretation is to be applied whereby the OT is understood strictly through a Christocentric and New Covenant lens. The result is, as Willem VanGemeren perceptively stated, the "new" Reformed hermeneutic is no longer "the Old is in the New revealed and the New is in the Old concealed," but rather "the Old is by the New restricted and the New is on the Old inflicted." [W. A. VanGemeren, "Israel as the Hermeneutical Crux in the Interpretation of Prophecy," WTJ, 46 (1984), 268]" Ref-1263, p. 104 "Our concern is now the hermeneutical principle that imposes the NT revelation of Jesus Christ on the OT in such a way that the new covenant (upper layer) has become the controlling hermeneutic whereby the old covenant (lower layer) is christologically reinterpreted. Colin Chapman, Steve Motyer, Stephen Sizer, Peter Walker, and N. T. Wright, representing UK Anglicanism, and Anthony Hoekema, William Hendriksen, Hans K. LaRondelle, and O. Palmer Robertson, representing US scholarship, provide further basic scholarly agreement. With variation in tone, they all draw on the same essential Augustinian root to examine the OT through the controlling lens of the NT. They would all agree with the fundamental hermeneutical approach of Turretin, Fairbairn, Bavinck, and Vos, representing four hundred years of Reformed eschatology. But all of these scholars without exception--and this in no way being a coincidence--emphatically assert the covenantal nullification of ethnic, national, and territorial Israel." Ref-1263, p. 179 "Steve Motyer has stated, . . . "The New Testament 're-reading' of the Old Testament promises sees their climax in Jesus, and makes him the 'end' of the story. The interpretation of Old Testament prophecy and other 'Israel' texts must be approached from the perspective of this basic New Testament teaching, and must follow the guidelines of New Testament interpretation. . . . the New Testament writers are 'normative' for us, in showing us how to interpret Old Testament prophecy." Ref-1263, p. 189 "We need to consider with closer scrutiny the extent to which Jesus Christ ought to be dominant in the interpretation of biblical eschatology as an overriding hermeneutical principle. Some would emphatically suggest that the more we "see only Jesus," even in the OT, the more we are keeping to the heart of the Bible. So this Christocentricity in interpreting the OT, even as accentuated by Reformed hermeneutics, has to be right. But I must carefully assert, in upholding a Trinitarian perspective with regard to the headship of the Father, that it is possible for such an understanding of Christocentricity to be misguided. This is not an insignificant point since it is common today, especially within Reformed Christianity as Thomas Small pointed out in The Forgotten Father, for an incorrect prominence to be given to Jesus Christ (as though impossible to challenge) that results in biblical distortion." Ref-1263, p. 192 hermeneutics - eclectic : ☩ + "Eclectic hermeneutics allow a person to switch from literal to allegorical and from allegorical to literal in any given passage in order to support a preferred theological persuasion. In Revelation, this most often happens under the cover of assuming that the book's apocalyptic genre allows for such vacillation. Eclecticism allows Beale to interpret idealistically in some places, such as in chapters 7 and 14, and futuristically in others such as in chapter 19." Robert L. Brian A. Shealy, "Redrawing the Line Between Hermeneutics and Application", Ref-0231, p. 184. "In some expositions of the new hermeneutic, real and objective meaning in a text is a mirage, and the pursuit of it as useful as chasing the Cheshire cat. "Polysemy" applied to entire texts is defended in the most naive way -- that is, a theory that argues a text has many meanings, none of them objectively true, and all of them valid or invalid according to their effect on the interpreter. But such absolute relativism is not only unnecessary, but also self-contradictory; for the authors of such views expect us to understand the meaning of their articles!" Ref-0698, p. 126. "Proper exegesis includes the following disciplines: (a) establishing the Hebrew text by textual criticism, (b) establishing the literary genre by form criticism, (c) defining significant terms by the use of a concordance, a lexicon, and a theological word book, (d) parsing and deciding the sense of all grammatical forms, (e) identifying and interpreting figures of speech, (f) decoding the author's rhetoric, (g) abstracting the biblical writer's thesis, and (h) locating the text's teaching with the contexts of the progress of redemptive history and of the history of Christian doctrine." hermeneutics - fourfold sense : Gen. 1:3 ☩

"During the Middle Ages, the fourfold sense of Scripture was taught. Medieval scholars took Origen's threefold sense -- the literal, the moral, and the spiritual -- and subdivided the spiritual into the allegorical and the anagogical. As schoolman Thomas Aquinas affirmed, 'The literal sense is that which the author intends, but God bieng the Author, we may expect to find in Scripture a wealth of meaning.' An example of how the fourfold sense was worked out during the Middle Ages is Genesis 1:3, 'Let there be light.' Medieval churchmen interpreted that sentence to mean (1) Historically and literally -- An act of creation; (2) Morally -- May we be mentally illumined by Christ; (3) Allegorically -- Let Christ be love; and (4) Anagogically -- May we be led by Christ to glory." Ref-0207, p. 53. "This nonliteral, and sometimes quite fanciful, methodology was commonly accepted throughout most of the Middle Ages. Its widespread use led to the development of what is technically termed the quadriga, or fourfold exegesis, which is explicitly defined in the glossa ordinaria. In the gloss we learn that the four sense are: (1) The Historical (historia) -- The literal sense of the text that explains what happened. (2) The Allegorical (allegoria) -- The spiritual sense of the text that is represented by the literal sense. (3) The Tropological (tropologia) -- The moral declaration of the text. (4) The Anagogical (anagoge) -- The sense of the text that draws the reader to heavenly contemplation. The latter three sense of the text represented the Christian virtues of faith, love, and hope." Ref-0791, pp. 65-66.

"[Illegitimate totality transfer] occurs when the various meanings of a word in different contexts are gathered together and then presumed to be present in any single context." Ref-0231, p. 204. "The fallacy in this instance lies in the supposition that the meaning of a word in a specific context is much broader than the context itself allows and may bring with it the word's entire semantic range. This step is sometimes called illegitimate totality tranfer." Ref-0698, pp. 60-61. "We must repeat that by taking a word out of context and inserting it into a totally foreign and different context one may prove some quite ridiculous and extraordinary things! There is a place for comparing word meanings, but when word usages are compared, and translations are consequently emended, it should be at least on the basis of similar contexts, and hopefully, on much more evidence as well!" hermeneutics - Jewish classical : ☩

"Classical Jewish interpretation of the Bible has been characterized by four methods, summarized by the acronym PaRDeS, spelled with the four Hebrew consonants פ, ר, ד, ס (P, R, D, S). They stand for Peshat (meaning "simple" and referring to the plain meaning of the text), Remez (meaning "hint" and referring to an allusion to another teaching in a secondary biblical text), Derash (meaning "search" and referring to the homiletical interpretation of the text in terms of relevance and application), and Sod (meaning "secret" and referring to mystical interpretation). Thus, the four basic Jewish interpretive methods were plain, allusion, homiletical, and mystical. According to the Talmud, peshat is the most foundational, expressed by the dictum, "A verse cannot depart from its plain meaning (peshat)."Ref-1272, p. 115.

hermeneutics - literal vs. spiritual vs. figurative vs. mystical :

☩ + "Literal is not opposed to spiritual but to figurative; spiritual is an antithesis on the one hand to material, and on the other to carnal (in a bad sense). The Literalist is not one who denies that figurative language, that symbols are used in prophecy, nor does he deny that great spiritual truths are set forth therein; his position is simply, that the prophecies are to be normally interpreted (i.e., according to the received laws of language) as any other utterances are interpreted--that which is manifestly literal being regarded as literal, and that which is manifestly figuratively being so regarded. The position of the Spiritualist is not that which is properly indicated by the term. He is one who holds that certain portions are to be normally interpreted, other portions are to be regarded as having a mystical sense. The terms properly expressive of the schools are normal and mystical." John Peter Lange, A Commentary on the Holy Scripture: Revelation, p. 98. "What can happen when men cut loose from literality may be seen in Gregory the Great's exposition of the Book of Job, where we learn that the patriarch's three friends denote the heretics; his seven sons are the twelve apostles; his seven thousand sheep are God's faithful people; and his three thousand humpbacked camels are the depraved Gentiles!" Ref-0138, p. 143. "It should be clear, however, that regardless of the terms chosen to designate the anti-millenarian scheme of prophetic interpretation, it is a combination of two different systems, shifting back and forth between the spiritualizing and literal methods.

The hermeneutical plow is pulled by 'an ox and an ass.' For this reason, the scheme may be appropriately be called eclectical."

Ref-0183, p. 144. "It is not true that the premillennialists require every single passage to be interpreted literally without exception. They do hold, on the other hand, that if the language is symbolic, it is to be governed by the laws relating to symbols; if figurative, by the laws dealing with figures; if typical, but the laws connected with types; if literal, by the laws of non-figurative speech." Charles Lee Feinberg, Premillennialism or Amillennialism?, p. 27, cited by Ref-0207, p. 264. "About the Time of the End, a body of men will be raised up who will turn their attention to the Prophecies, and insist upon their literal interpretation, in the midst of much clamor and opposition. -- Sir Isaac Newton" Ref-0847, p. 3. "... when the NT Jewish author quoted the OT, sometimes with a methodology that is not following the exact literal meaning, it is presumptuous to conclude that this usage nullifies the possibility of the original passage retaining literal validity. A more Hebrew based hermeneutic is preferred that remains based on a literal understanding of the text." Ref-1263, p. 196 hermeneutics - meaning : ☩ + "If one cannot determine accurately the meaning of the OT prediction, then there is no way to tell how the NT writers have used that text. . . . Some identify the meaning with the human author's intention, while others hold that meaning is identical with God's intention. Still others claim that meaning is as broad as the canonical interpretation of the text. And finally, there are a group of NT scholars who would identify apostolic hermeneutics with first-century Jewish hermeneutics." Paul D. Feinberg, "Hermeneutics of Discontinuity," Ref-0199, p. 112. The author goes on to identify the following ways to define the meaning: 1. the intention of the author; 2. the understanding of the author; 3. the understanding of the readers in the prophet's day; 4. the significance (the application) of the text; 5. the use of the text in the NT. "However, as Howe warns, "One should not attempt to ascertain the true meaning of biblical terms in the light of any current scientific constructs."⁷⁷ The guiding hermeneutic principle for this and any text should be, What did the original author intend and what would the original readers have understood by what was written?^{78b} Douglas C. Bozung, An Evaluation of the Biosphere Model of Genesis 1, Ref-0200 vol. 162 no. 648, October-December 2005 406:423, p. 421.

hermeneutics - meaning - personal : ☩ + "Truth is never determined by looking at God's Word and asking, "What does it mean to me?" Whenever I hear someone talk like that, I'm inclined to ask, "What did the Bible mean before you existed? What does God mean by what He says?" those are the proper questions to be asking. Truth and meaning are not determined by our intuition, experience, or desire. The true meaning of Scripture -- or anything else, for that matter -- has already been determined and fixed by the mind of God. The task of an interpreter is to discern that meaning. And proper interpretation must precede application." Ref-0789, p. xvi.

hermeneutics - midrash : ☩ + "A hermeneutic that is growing in popularity is the midrash or pesher approach, which asserts that the New Testament understood the Old Testament messianic hope using the interpretive methods of early Judaism . . . According to this view, the Old Testament prophecies commonly referred to historical figures present in the prophets' own days. Then, the New Testament interpreted these passages according to the intertestamental Jewish method called midrash or pesher. The New Testament cited these ancient passages in creative ways to show their fulfillment in contemporary events. . . . This approach has been adopted by critical as well as evangelical scholars." Ref-1272, pp. 30-31. "One problem with citing midrashic background as the explanation of the New Testament's exegesis of the Old is that this is historically anachronistic. It is based on rabbinic exegesis of a later time but substantially misunderstands how pre-AD 70 Jewish interpreters used biblical texts. . . . A second flaw in taking New Testament citations of the Old as creative exegesis in the form of midrash is that it misunderstands the true purpose of midrash. The point of midrash is not to pull texts out of context. Rather, a more correct understanding of midrash is that it was to show the continuing relevance of Scripture to contemporary life." This approach is probably one of necessity, for amillennialists seldom agree with each other in specific interpretations of prophecy except to be against the earthly millennium." Ref-0207, p. 73.

hermeneutics - NT reinterprets OT : ☪ + "I further believe that the NT authors, according to a Hebrew mindset, when rightly comprehended, would be startled to discover that they are chargeable with the principle of "reinterpretation" that tends to denigrate the plain, original meaning of the Prophets." Ref-1263, p. 183 ". . . the hermeneutic of reinterpretation and transference is illegitimate, which takes the adapted quotation of the OT in the NT to be justification for nullifying the literal interpretation of that same OT passage. The reason is that it not only ignores a fundamental, Hebrew, hermeneutical frame of reference, but it also brings about a serious distortion of meaning, especially where the eschatological message of the Prophets is concerned." hermeneutics - objectivity : ☪ + "Our quest for objectivity in interpretation resembles our quest for Christian sanctification. Rather than expending all our energies explaining why we cannot attain absolute holiness, let us set our sights on the target of being holy as He is holy (1 Peter 1:16). The fact that we cannot attain unblemished holiness does not excuse us from continuing to pursue it without becoming preoccupied with reasons why we must fail. So it is in hermeneutics and exegesis. Our goal is the objecting meaning of Scripture. Let us not become distracted from pursuing it. It is within the capability of the Spirit-illuminated believer to arrive at objective meaning -- i.e., the meaning God intended to transmit through His human authors." Ref-0231, p. 57.

hermeneutics - one meaning : ☪ + "A fundamental principle in grammatico-historical exposition is that the words and sentences can have but one significance in one and the same connection. The moment we neglect this principle we drift out upon a sea of uncertainty and conjecture" (Terry, Biblical Hermeneutics 205). "But here we must remember the old adage: 'Interpretation is one; application is many.' This means that there is only one meaning to a passage of Scripture which is determined by careful study" (Ramm, Protestant Biblical Interpretation 113). Summit II of the International Council for Biblical Inerrancy concurred with this principle: "We affirm that the meaning expressed in each biblical text is single, definite and fixed. We deny that the recognition of this single meaning eliminates the variety of its application." (Article VII, "Articles of Affirmation and Denial," adopted by the International Council in Biblical Inerrancy, 10-13 November 1982). For further discussion of the principle of single meaning, see Chapter Six in my Evangelical Hermeneutics: The Old Versus the New (Grand Rapids: Kregel, 200) 141-64." Robert L. hermeneutics - Origen : Pr. 22:20 ☪ "His great defect is the neglect of the grammatical and historical sense and his constant desire to find a hidden mystic meaning. He even goes further in this direction than the Gnostics, who everywhere saw transcendental, unfathomable mysteries. His hermeneutical principle assumes a threefold sense -- somatic, psychic, and pneumatic; or literal, moral, and spiritual. His allegorical interpretation is ingenious, but often runs far away from the text and degenerates into the merest caprice." Ref-0124 cited in Ref-0123, p. 59. "Allegorism allowed Origen to freely appropriate Old Testament passages where ethnic Israel is clearly intended while denegrating the Jewish people themselves. It is ironic that Origen was inspired in part by the example of a Jewish scholar in applying the allegorical method to the biblical text. . . . Origen offered his own rationale of allegorism in book IV, section 1 of his work On First Principles. For him, Proverbs 22:20 authorizes interpreters to seek a three-fold meaning in each passage of Scripture: fleshly, psychic, and spiritual. In practice, Origen insisted mainly on distinguishing between the literal and spiritual meaning of the Biblical text, the spiritual meaning belonging to a higher order of ideas than the literal. He motivead this view by appealing to the principle of divine inspiration and by affirming that many statements made by the biblical writers were not literally true and that many events, presented as historical, were inherently impossible. Thus only simple believers could limit themselves to the literal meaning of the text." Ref-0685, pp. 82-83.

In other words, historic tradition--especially that allied with Wittenberg in Germany, Geneva in Switzerland, and Westminster in England--tended to strongly influence exegesis. Two degrees of analogy are acknowledged: (1) the positive, something so plainly stated and based on so many passages that there can be no question as to the meaning (e.g., sin, redemption, and omnipotence), and (2) the general, something not based on explicit declarations but on the obvious scope and import of Scriptural teachings as a whole. . . . Inconsistencies, omissions, and wrong emphases may go undetected.”” Robertson McQuilkin, Understanding and Applying the Bible (Chicago: Moody Press, 1992), 209, 219 cited by Steve Lewis, “The Doctrine of the Trinity - Part 1”, Ref-0785, Volume 12 Number 35 March 2008, 31:48, p. 47. “True prophetic study is an inquiry into these unsearchable counsels, these deep riches of Divine wisdom and knowledge. Beneath the light it gives, the Scriptures are no longer a heterogeneous compilation of religious books, but one harmonious whole, from which no part could be omitted without destroying the completeness of the revelation. And yet the study is disparaged in the Churches as being of no practical importance. If the Churches are leavened with scepticism at this moment, their neglect of prophetic study in this its true and broader aspect has done more than all the rationalism of Germany to promote the evil. hermeneutics - sensus plenior : ☪ + “The classic definition of sensus plenior, . . . is “that additional, deeper meaning, intended by God but not clearly intended by the human author, which is seen to exist in the words of a biblical text (or group of texts, or even a whole book) when they are studied in the light of further revelation or development in the understanding of revelation.”” Raymond E. Brown, The Sensus Plenior of Sacred Scripture (Baltimore: Saint Mary’s University Press, 1955), 92, cited by Gregory V. Trull, “Views on Peter’s Use of Psalm 16:8-11 in Acts 2:25-32,” Ref-0200, vol. 161 no. 642 (April-June 2004), 194:214, pp. 203-204. “Though sensus plenior has a range of definitions, its basic sense is that God intended something more than the human authors intended or understood. This additional meaning can be found in later revelation, primarily the New Testament. It is a meaning different from what the human author understood, though it may be related to his intended meaning in some way. Moo’s definition of sensus plenior is helpful.

“Although precise definitions of the idea may differ, we will use it to designate the idea that there is in many scriptural texts a ‘fuller sense’ than that consciously intended by the human author—a sense intended by God, the ultimate author of Scripture. It is this meaning, an integral part of the text that is discerned and used by later interpreters who appear to find ‘new’ meaning in Old Testament texts. This ‘new’ meaning is, then, part of the author’s intention—the divine author and not necessarily the human author.”” Gary W. Derickson, The New Testament Church as a Mystery, Ref-0200 Volume 166 Number 664, October-December 2009, 436:445, p. 440. See hermeneutics - single meaning. “. . . classical dispensationalists generally reject sensus plenior, or a “fuller meaning” of passages. hermeneutics - single meaning : scripture - single meaning ☪ + “That a single passage has one meaning and only one meaning has been a long-established principle of biblical interpretation. . . . Many years ago, Milton S. Terry stated a basic hermeneutical principle that contemporary evangelicals have difficulty observing, the principle of single meaning: “A fundamental principle in grammatico-historical exposition is that the words and sentences can have but one significance in one and the same connection. The moment we neglect this principle we drift out upon a sea of uncertainty and conjecture.” More recently, Bernard Ramm stated the same principle in different words: “But here we must remember the old adage: ‘Interpretation is one; application is many.’ This means that there is only one meaning to a passage of Scripture which is determined by careful study.” Summit II of the International Council on Biblical Inerrancy concurred with this principle: “We affirm that the meaning expressed in each biblical text is single, definite, and fixed. We deny that the recognition of this single meaning eliminates the variety of its application.” Ref-0231, pp. 141-142. “When interpreting the Old Testament and New Testament each in light of a single grammatical-historical meaning of each passage, two kinds of New Testament uses of the Old Testament surface, one in which the New Testament writer observes the grammatical-historical sense of the Old Testament passage and the other in which the New Testament writer goes beyond the grammatical-historical sense in using a passage. Inspired sensus plenior application (ISPA) designates the latter usage. . . . The ISPA type of use does not grant contemporary interpreters a license to copy the method of New Testament writers, nor does it violate the principle of single meaning. The ISPA meaning of the Old Testament did not exist for humans until the time of the New Testament citation, . . . A second question relates to the principle of single meaning. Does not the New

Testament’s assigning of an application based on a second meaning to an Old Testament passage violate that principle? That the passage has two meanings is obvious, but only one of those meanings derives from the grammatical-historical interpretation of the Old Testament itself. The other comes from a grammatical-historical analysis of the New Testament passage that cites it. The authority for the second meaning of the Old Testament passage is the New Testament, not the Old Testament. The Old Testament produces only the literal meaning. The sensus plenior meaning emerges only after an ISPA of the Old Testament wording to a new situation. The New Testament writers could assign such new meanings authoritatively because of the inspiration of what they wrote. A third question is, “Did God know from the beginning that the Old Testament passage had two meanings?” Obvious He did, but until the New Testament citation of that passage, the second or sensus plenior meaning did not exist as far as humans were concerned. Since hermeneutics is a human discipline, gleaning that second sense is an impossibility in an examination of the Old Testament source of the citation.” Ref-0231, p. 241, 252-253. “The Bible, written by men ages ago as expressions of their own thought and intentions, is also the product of the divine mind and will and is therefore communicative of His meaning as well. Whether labeled, “secondary meaning,” “double fulfillment,” or sensus plenior (none of which does justice to the complexity of the problem), the fact remains that the Author and the authors worked hand in hand, collaborating on texts that may and should be said to have one meaning -- not many and certainly not self-contradictory -- but a meaning infused with ramifications far beyond anything envisioned at the outset.” Eugene H. Merrill, The Old Testament Word, Ref-0055, Vol. 10 No. 29 May/June 2006, 36:48, p. 46. See hermeneutics - sensus plenior. “. . . the whole idea of sensus plenior is highly questionable. And if thou leave the literal sense, thou canst not but go out of the way.  ☪ + “In his massive Reformed Dogmatics, in true Augustinian fashion, Bavinck approaches the whole of the OT as follows: "The spiritualization of the Old Testament, rightly understood, is not an invention of Christian theology but has its beginning in the New Testament itself. The Old Testament in spiritualized form, that is, the Old Testament stripped of its temporal and sensuous form, is the New Testament. . . . All Old Testament concepts shed their external Israelitish meanings and become manifest in their spiritual and eternal sense." Bavinc declared further, with a decidedly anti-Judaic tone, . . . "Real Jews, the true children of Abraham, are those who believe in Christ (Rom. 9:8; Gal. 3:29, etc.). The community of believers has in all respects replaced carnal, national Israel." "There are those who think hermeneutical principles for interpreting types justify a non-literal hermeneutic in interpreting prediction/fulfillment texts. When one understands the relationship between a type and its antitype, it should be clear that such is not the case." Paul D. Feinberg, "Hermeneutics of Discontinuity," Ref-0197, p. 120. "If any one will learn the connection between prophecy and its fulfillment, let him read the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, and compare it with the story of the Passion: so vague and figurative that no one could have acted out the drama it foretold; but yet so definite and clear that, once fulfilled, the simplest child can recognize its scope and meaning." hermeneutics - progressive revelation : ☉ +

"But there are serious weaknesses in using the NT as a pair of glasses through which to read the OT, as nice as it may sound. By reading the NT back into the OT, Covenant Theologians may in effect minimize the historical-grammatical interpretation of great sections of the OT and produce allegorizations of the OT. New Covenant Theologians admit that the OT says one thing (i.e., "Israel"), but it must mean something else (i.e., "church"), because they have restricted its meaning only to what they think the NT directs the OT to say. New Covenant Theologians in effect "undo, or replace the results that would have been obtained in performing true biblical theology of the OT." In doing theology, the OT is almost an afterthought in this procedure. In actuality, the NT is used like the "presidential power of veto" over legitimate exegetical results in OT passages. Consequently, a true OT biblical theology that serves to form the production of systematic theology is nonexistent. The systematic theology is "one-legged." The proper approach for doing theology is as follows: (1) The formulation of a biblical theology from the OT; (2) The formulation of a biblical theology from the NT; (3) The production of a systematic theology by harmonizing all biblical inputs to theology. And why is this better? For at least three reasons. First, because this is the nature of progressive revelation. In progressive revelation, revelation builds upon previous revelation. Second, because this process enables the interpreter to read the OT with a consistent grammatical-historical hermeneutic. And third, because in this procedure, there is really no priority of one testament over another except in a chronological order of progressive revelation. In the end it is superior to be able to insist that an OT test must not be stripped of its original meaning in its context, found through historical-grammatical interpretation and biblical theology. Both the NT and the OT should be treated as perspicuous, not just the NT." Larry D. There he exhibited shows in honour of Caesar, inaugurating this as a festival for the emperor's welfar. And there came together to it a multitude of the provincial officials and of those who had been promoted to a distinguished position. On the second day of the shows he put on a robe all made of silver, of altogether wonderful weaving, and arried in the theatre at break of day. Then the silver shone as the sun's first rays fell upon it and glittered wonderfully, its resplendence inspiring a sort of fear and trembling in those who gazed upon it. Immediately his flatterers called out from various quarters, in words which in truth were not for his good, addressing him as a god, and invoking him with the cry, "Be propitious! if hitherto we have revered thee as a human being, yet henceforth we confess thee to be superior to mortal nature. The king did not rebuke them, nor did he repudiate their impious flattery. But looking up soon afterwards he saw the owl sitting on a rope above his head, and immediately recognized it as a messenger of evil as it had formerly been a messenger for good, and a pang of grief pierced his heart. There came also a severe pain in his belly, beginning with a violent attack. . . . So he was carried quickly into the palace, and the news sped abroad among all that he would certainly die before long. . . . And when he had suffered continuously for five days from the pain in his belly, he departed this life in the fifty-fourth year of his age and the seventh of his reign" The parallels between the two accounts [that of Luke and Josephus] are obvious, as is also the absence of collusion between them." Immediately prior to the birth of Jesus, there was protracted struggle regarding the rule of Israel which provides background regarding Herod's paranoia of another possible king: "Hyrcanus [134-104 B.C.] did not claim the title of king, but acted as if he occupied that position. . . . Unlike his predecessors, Aristobulus openly claimed the tile of king. . . . Aristobulus's widow, Salome Alexandra, released his brothers from prison and offered herself in marriage to one of the, Alexander Jannaeus [103-76]. This enabled him to become both king and high priest. . . .

Antigonus, the last Maccabean ruler, was locked in a bitter struggle for control with Herod and his brother Phasael until the invasion of the Parthians in 40 B.C. In response to promises by Antigonus, the Parthians captured Phasael and Hyrcanus II. They then enthroned Antigonus as king and high priest of the Jews. Herod, however, gained Roman assistance and was given authority in the land of Israel. A return of the Parthians in 38 briefly restored the rule to Antigonus. By 37 Herod emerged the victor, theoretically an independent monarch, but in fact a puppet of Rome. It is he whom history labeled King Herod (Mtt. 2:1) and Herod the Great. the Greek versions known to him with the Hebrew text of his day, which apparently was close to the form that has come to us as the Masoretic text. Most of what is known about this work comes from two brief descriptions by Origen himself and from the writings of later church fathers who saw the work. . . . he wrote the available texts in parallel columns. For most of the Old Testament he needed to use six columns, the feature from which the name of his work, the Hexapla, is taken. These columns contained the following texts: 1. Hebrew text; 2. transliteration of the Hebrew text into Greek letters; 3. Aquila's translation; 4. Symmachus's translation; 5. translation of the Seventy; 6. Theodotion's translation." But even though Thiele's colleague Siegfried Horn and many others pointed out this explanation of the synchronisms in 2 Kings 18, Thiele refused to accept that solution and did not even discuss it in the final two editions of his book." Again, Thiele advanced 701 B.C. as the fourteenth year of Hezekiah. He also fixed the fall of Samaria as B.C. 723, a date which places these two events 22 years apart . . . However, as Faulstich pointed out in 1987, II Kings 18:9-10 state that Samaria fell in the sixth year of Hezekiah and that in his fourteenth Sennacherib invaded his domain, thereby defining the two episodes as being separated by only 8 years . . . Hippolytus - Daniel : Dan. 7:8; Dan. 7:20; Dan. 7:24; Dan. 9:24-27; Rev. 11:3; Rev. 13:1; Rev. 17:3; Rev. 17:12; Rev. 17:16 ☪ "Hippolytus (ca. 170-ca/ 236), a disciple of Irenaeus who served as a presbyter of the church at Rome in the early third century, wrote his Commentary on the Prophet Daniel in which he clearly espoused a premillennial prophetic outlook (as did Irenaeus) . . . This is the first known extant commentary on Daniel. Hippolytus's view of Daniel 9:24-27 is also quoted later by Jerome. Hippolytus equated the beast of Revelation 13 and the "little horn" of Daniel 7 with the future Antichrist, who will rule for three and a half years, while he expected the "ten horns" of Daniel 7 to arise out of the Roman Empire of his day. Hippolytus saw the seventy-weeks prophecy as taking place in three periods. The first seven weeks were the forty nine years before Joshua, the high priest. This was followed by sixty-two weeks (434 years) from Joshua/Zerubbabel/Ezra until Jesus Christ. (This is a puzzling assertion since Joshua and Ezra were separated by quite a few years.) This sixty-two weeks would then be followed by a "gap" of time before the final "week." During this final week (a future period of seven years in which the Antichrist will come to power), Elijah and Enoch will appear as the two witnesses (Rev. 11). The "anointing of the most holy" in Daniel 9:24 refers to the anointing of Christ in His first coming (a view common among the early church fathers). The halting of sacrifice mentioned in verse 27 is taken in a spiritual sense rather than in reference to literal sacrifices. . . . Although Hippolytus said the occurrence of אֲשֶׁר in verse 25 refers to Joshua, the high priest, at the time of the return from the Babylonian Captivity, he said the second reference to אֲשֶׁר is to Jesus Christ." Gal. 3:27; Tit. 3:6 ☩ "The very nature of the baptism of the Holy Spirit forbids that it be experimental [experiential]. As an act of God, it is clearly instantaneous. There is no period of transition. The believer is brought from his position in Adam to his position in Christ instantly. In the nature of any instantaneous act, there can be no experience of process." Ref-0019, p. 147. "[Someone will] argue for two baptisms. Acts 1:5, he says, is a baptism 'with' the Spirit for miraculous power, and 'this baptism with the Holy Spirit was not, of course, the baptism of Jews and Gentiles into one body.' The baptism of 1 Corinthians 12:13 is 'by' the Spirit, and this is the one that forms the Body church. Such a distinction is quite admissible as far as possible meanings of the Greek preposition en are concerned. The preposition does, at different times, mean 'with,' 'in,' and 'by.' That is not contested. What is contested is the artificiality of making it mean one thing in Acts and another in 1 Corinthians when it is used in exactly the same phrase with the word 'Spirit.'" Ref-0056, p. 205. Holy Spirit baptism can be distinguished from Holy Spirit - filled by commanded of believers in Eph. 5:18. "Our contention is that this is an illustration of en used for means. By calling 'Spirit' means here does not deny the personality of the Holy Spirit. Rather, the Holy Spirit is the instrument that Christ uses to baptize, even though [H]e is a person. Since πνευματι ἁγίω clearly indicated means in Mark 1:8 (as in several other passages dealing with Spirit-baptism), it is surely not unreasonable to see 'Spirit' as the means here. Furthermore, if the Holy Spirit is the agent in this text, there is a theological problem: When is the prophecy of Mark 1:8 fulfilled? When would Christ baptize with the Holy Spirit? Because of the grammatical improbability of pneumati expressing agent in 1Cor. 12:13, it is better to see it as means and as the fulfillment of Mark 1:8. Thus, Christ is the unnamed agent. This also renders highly improbable one popular interpretation, viz., that there are two Spirit baptisms in the NT, one at aslavation and one later." Ref-0129, p. 374. "what we have in the Book of Acts is a record of events in a period of history which is transitional in certain important respects. Hence, while every portion of Holy Scripture is 'profitable for doctrine,' we shall find in Acts some events which are unique in their appointed time and place, never being intended to serve as a permanent norm for the Church of the present age. For example, the day of Pentecost has never been precisely duplicated, and all attempts to do so have resulted in nothing but spiritual disappointment and often disaster." Ref-0183, p. 390. "The verb βαπτίζω followed by en indicates that Jesus would baptize men in the sphere of the Holy Spirit (locative of sphere), or with the Holy Spirit (dative of association), or by means of the Holy Spirit (instrumental of means). Blass-DeBrunner views en with the dative in an associative-instrumental sense when used with βαπτίζω, "to baptize with." Swete sees the dative as either as a dative, or manner, or of instrument." After eight years he must say, 'as on us at the beginning,' not 'as on all the churches.' Here is a case where silence is eloquent indeed!" Ref-0226, pp. 8-9. "This action of the Holy Spirit was not the norm when anyone was saved. In supporting his stand for accepting Gentiles into the church, Peter referred to the beginning," that is, Pentecost, arguing that if the Holy Spirit Himself accepted Cornelius, then so too should the Jews. The Pentecostal experience was said by the Holy Spirit to prove that in the church there was now no difference between Israel and the Gentiles . . . (Eph. 2:14-15)." Holy Spirit - incarnation by : Mtt. 1:18; Luke 1:35 ☪ “[One] assumption . . . is that if Jesus was generated from Mary’s egg, then He would inherit the sin nature of man. This presumes a lack in the power of God because it is not essentially true. In fact, Luke spells out exactly why Mary’s egg was generated but Jesus did not inherit Mary’s sin nature. This is found in Luke 1:35 . . . What kept Yeshua from inheriting the sin nature of Mary was the overshadowing work of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit generated Mary’s egg, protecting it from inheriting the sin nature and there what was born of Mary was holy. Again, the requirement was that Messiah be a direct descendant of Adam, Abraham, Judah, and David. If Mary was simply a surrogate mother and was not the biological mother of Jesus, then Jesus does not have a direct biological line to anyone before Him. No creation occurred in the womb, but the Holy Spirit took one of Mary’s eggs and generated it and produced the sinless God-Man.” Arnold Fruchtenbaum, Questions and Answers, Ref-0067, Summer 2005, p. 4.

Such an approach is based on the assumption that the antecedent of ἐκείνος is πνεῦμα. . . . But this is erroneous. In all these Johannine passages, πνεῦμα is appositional to a masculine noun. The gender of ἐκείνος thus has nothing to do with the natural gender of πνεῦμα. The antecedent of ἐκείνος, in each case, is παράκλητος, not πνεῦμα. . . . Thus, since παράκλητος is masculine, so is the pronoun. Holy Spirit - poured on : Pr. 1:23; Isa. 32:15; Isa. 44:3; Isa. 59:21; Eze. 36:26-27; Eze. 39:29; Joel 2:28-29; Zec. 12:10; Acts 2:17; Acts 2:33; Acts 10:45 ☪ + “Almost everyone believes that Acts 2:14-on has to do with the giving of the New Covenant. One of the dynamics of that covenant is the coming of the Holy Spirit that was clearly witnessed to when the gathered disciples began to speak in tongues. The crucial issue is found in verse 16. Is the pouring out of the Spirit a fulfillment of Joel 2, or is it a launching of the New Covenant, a starting point, a beginning? There are three approaches to answering this issue: 1. Peter uses Joel 2 simply as an illustration about the coming of the Spirit. 2. Peter uses

Joel 2 as meaning it was a fulfillment of the Joel prediction. 3. Peter uses Joel 2 to say that the New Covenant has started as evidenced by the coming of the Spirit. This is a launching of and a starting point for the New Covenant.

As an illustration. The common way to describe an illustration is with comparison. If this was an illustration/comparison use of Joel 2, Peter would probably have used the Greek word homoios, that would be translated "like, like as, something like." "The outpouring of the Spirit is something like what was spoke of by Joel." As meaning fulfillment. The common way to describe fulfillment, would be to use the Greek expression "It was fulfilled." Plaroo ("that it was fulfilled, completed") is used this way some 29 times in the New Testament. But Peter says "this is what was spoken of through the prophet Joel." Touto estin "this is that which has been spoken" means that it is exactly the same as what Joel said, but it is not implying that the New Covenant is "fulfilled" but it is started, it has begun, it has been launched." Dr. Mal Couch, http://www.conservativeonline.org/debate/Tim_Warner/Tim_Warner_01_02.htm "nowhere does Peter say that all the elements of the prophecy were fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. His very cautious language. . . points back to the one thing in which Peter was primarily interested, i.e., the testimony uttered under the Spirit's power on this occasion. This is confirmed by an interpolation inserted in the quotation from Joel. The last clause of Acts 2:18, 'and they shall prophesy,' is not found in Joel, either in Hebrew or Greek texts. It was inserted by the speaker, evidently to emphasize his point of interest. . ." Ref-0183, p. 400. "There is an indication in the Joel 2:28-32 text that the application of the promise is to extend beyond the ethnic bounds of the nation. Joel 2:28 says, 'I will pur out my Spirit on all people' (עַל כָּל בָּשָׂר). There are those that hold that this expression refers exclusively to the nation of Israel. However, I think that the best evidence supports usage broader than ethnic Israel. עַל כָּל בָּשָׂר occurs thirty-two times outside of Joel in the OT. In twenty-three of these occasions the reference is to Gentiles alone (e.g., Deu. 5:26; Isa. 49:26; 66:16; Zec. 2:13). In the majority of its uses it serves as a reference to everyone regardless of race, sex or age. This outpouring, then, even in its promise, is to be upon some who are not Jews." Paul D. John 20:22); John 20:22; Acts 8:14-17; Acts 19:2-6 ☉ In Acts 8:14 this was God's way of preventing two churches from forming (the Samaritans who worshiped at a rival temple at Mt. Gerazim vs. the Jews who worshiped in Jerusalem - John 4:20). It had the two-fold effect of showing the Samaritan's their interrelationship with the Jews in one body and validating the Samaritans to the Jews as true believers. In the case of Gentiles (Acts 10:45; Acts 19:2), it served to validate to the Jews that God was indeed including the Gentiles in the giving of the Spirit (Acts 11:15-17). "When the Samaritans were evangelized by Philip (Acts 8:14), it was Peter and John who were sent to examine the situation; and they served as the agents who mediated the Holy Spirit to the Samaritans, thereby ensuring that the Jewish believers in Jerusalem and the Samaritan half-breed believers farther north would begin on the same footing and belong to the same body." Ref-0062, p. 17. "In none of the three incidents of the Gospel going to Jews, Samaritans and Gentiles, was the experience the same. At Pentecost the Spirit was manifested by a mighty wind and tongues like as of fire. In Samaria the Holy Spirit was received by the laying on of the hands of the apostles. There was no baptism mentioned and no speaking of tongues. However in the case of the Gentiles the Spirit came in response to the hearing of the Word. There was no laying on of hands, no wind or fire, but here speaking in tongues did follow. Here are three different circumstances where Jews, Samaritans and Gentiles received the Holy Spirit, and they were all different. Which shall we follow, if these are meant for today?" Ref-0105, p. 141 citing M. R. DeHaan, Pentecost and After, (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1964), p. 99. "The essential difference between the Samaritans (Acts 8) and the Gentiles (Acts 10), and why in Samaria there was the laying on of hands and not in Caesarea, was that Samaria had rejected the authority of Jerusalem and was postured in opposition to the Jews. Cornelius had embraced Judaism. He was already postured toward Jerusalem. Laying on of hands was necessary in Samaria in order to remove the schism and show the Samaritans that they must not continue in rejection and opposition to Jerusalem and the apostles. Conversely, it was necessary that there be no laying of hands on the Gentiles so that the apostles would not assume that Gentiles must become Jews to belong to the church of Christ." Ref-0105, pp. 141-142. "The Gentiles. . .received the Spirit apart from apostolic conferral so as to prevent inequality. Acts makes very clear that Gentiles are to be received into the church as Gentiles. The early Jewish church was slow to comprehend this distinction (Acts 10:32-11:18; 15:1-29)." This is made clear by what we read in 2Th. 2." Ref-0215. "The Papacy Not the Antichrist" "A number of suggestions have been proposed concerning the identification of the restrainer. Yet these suggestions all have their problems. (1) The Ancient Roman Empire and Its Ruler. But that empire and its rulers disappeared centuries ago, and the Antichrist was not revealed at that time. In addition, the Antichrist will be the ultimate ruler of a future form of the Roman Empire (Dan. 7). (2) Gentile World Dominion or Human Government. But these will not be removed before the Antichrist is revealed. He will be the ultimate ruler of the last form of Gentile world dominion or human government prior to the second coming. (3) The Jewish State. But the Jewish state will not be removed before the Antichrist is revealed. It will enter a binding, seven-year covenant relationship with him and will be desolated by him during the second half of his reign (Dan. 9:27). (4) Satan. But instead of being removed before the antichrist is revealed, Satan will empower him during his reign (2Th. 2:9). (5) The Binding of Satan. But Satan will not be bound and imprisoned in the bottomless pit until after the Antichrist has reigned and been judged by Christ at His Second Coming (Rev. 19:11-20:3). (6) The Preaching of the Message of Salvation. But the fact that many people will get saved during Antichrist's reign (Rev. 7; 13:7; 20:4; Dan. 7:21, 25) indicates that the message of salvation will not be removed before Antichrist is revealed. (7) The Church. Paul's indication that the restrainer is a person (2Th. 2:7) militates against this identification. (8) Michael, the Archangel. But instead of being removed before the Antichrist is revealed, Michael will be actively involved protecting Israel from total annihilation during the Great Tribulation portion of Antichrist's reign (Dan. 12:1). (9) Elijah. Paul indicated that the restrainer was present in the world, hindering the ultimate expression of lawlessness during the first century A.D. (2Th. 2:7). hour - John - Roman? : John 1:39; John 4:6; John 4:52 ☪ "When various hourly notations are considered in the Gospel according to John, it is found that they do in fact work out well in terms of the Roman reckoning. For example, in John 1:39 a reckoning from the morning would make the "tenth hour" four o'clock in the afternoon, but a reckoning from midnight would make it ten o'clock in the morning, the later being more appropriate to the fact that the two disciples then stayed with Jesus "that day." In John 4:6 the "sixth hour" would be midday in the one case, but six o'clock in the evening in the other, and the latter would be a very likely time for the gathering at the well. In John 4:52 the "seventh hour" would be one p.m. or seven p.m., and the latter may be more likely for the arrival at cana from Capernaum, a journey of twenty miles." Ref-0840, pp. 10-11.

It involves one word: Imminence. What does the purveyor of a new, novel, or absurd approach to end-times events have to say about the imminent return of Christ, which the Scriptures declare to be the watchword of the church? Any proposition that ignores, delays, or mutilates the clear meaning of the word and the way in which the early church understood

First, we cannot count on a certain amount of time transpiring before the imminent event happens; therefore, we should always be prepared for it to happen at any moment. Second, we cannot legitimately set a date for its happening. As soon as we set a date for an imminent event, we destroy the concept of imminency because we thereby say that a certain amount of time must transpire before that event can happen. A specific date for an event is contrary to the concept that the event could happen at any moment. Third, we cannot legitimately say that an imminent event will happen soon. . . . an imminent event may take place within a short time, but it does not have to do so in order to be imminent. Thus 'imminent' is not equal to 'soon.'" Ref-0220, p. 127. See Ref-0220, pp. 128-142 for an excellent discussion of imminency.

All the declarations of the Bible are, no doubt, equally divine; but this example of the Savior of the world has settled the question for us at once. This proof requires neither long nor learned researches; it is grasped by the hand of a child as powerfully as by that of a doctor. inerrancy - limited - illogical : ☪ + "[I]f the writers in their humanity were subject to scientific, historical, and other errors, why were they not also subject to theological errors? And if the Holy Spirit could preserve them from the logical error, why could not the same Spirit preserve them from scientific and historical errors, too? Once is no more probably than the other." Ref-1101, p. 94.
inerrancy - limited - results : ☪ + "Once limited inerrancy is accepted, it places the Bible in the same category with every other book that has ever been written. Every book contains in it some things that are truth. And what is true is inerrant. Only two things remain to be determined once this position is acknowledged. The first is what proportion of the book is true and what proportion false. It may be 90 percent false and 10 percent true; or it may be 90 percent true and 10 percent false. The second thing that needs to be determined is what parts of the book are true. Since the book contains both error and falsehood, of necessity, other criteria outside of the book must be brought to bear upon it to determine what is false and what is true. Whatever the source of the other criteria, that becomes the judge of the book in question. Thus the book becomes subordinated to the standard against which its truth is determined and measured. If inspiration means anything, and if inspiration pertains to the totality of the Bible, then we must see what limited inerrancy means. First, it means that something outside of and above the Bible becomes its judge. There is something that is truer and more sure than Scripture and whatever it is has not been inspired of God. So a noninspired source takes precedence over an inspired Bible. Second it leaves us in a vacuum without any basis for determining what parts of the Bible tell the truth and what parts do not." Ref-1101, p. 203. "Dr. Lindsell mentions that acceptance of inerrancy is the watershed of modern theological controversy. He is right in declaring that the attitude we have toward the trustworthiness of Scripture determines our later position, not only on faith, but also on practice. The evidence that those who surrender the doctrine of inerrancy inevitably move away from orthodoxy is indisputable." Harold J. Ockenga, Forward, Ref-1101, p. 12. "I shall argue that once infallibility is abandoned, however good the intentions of those who do it and however good they feel their reasons for doing so, it always and ever opens the door to further departures from the faith. Once errancy enters an institution, it does not simply become one of several options. It quickly becomes the regnant view and infallibility loses its foothold and at last is silenced effectively." Ref-1101, p. 25. "It is my contention that once biblical infallibility is surrendered it can lead to the most undesirable consequences. It will end in apostasy at last. It is my opinion that it is next to impossible to stop the process of theological deterioration once inerrancy is abandoned. I have said that it is a theological watershed just as the Continental Divide is the watershed for the United States and Canada. The water that flows on one side of the divide ends up in the Atlantic Ocean. The water that flows on the other side of the divide ends up in the Pacific Ocean. But once the water starts down one side or the other, it continues until it reaches its oceanic destination. Errancy and inerrancy constitute the two principles, and which one a person chooses determines where he will end up. No matter how sincere a man may be, and how carefully he guards against further theological concessions, they are inevitable once inerrancy is given up. Francis Schaeffer has told conferees at L'Abri that "the generation of those who first give up biblical inerrancy may have a warm evangelical background and real personal relationships with Jesus Christ so that they can 'live theologically' on the basis of their limited-inerrancy viewpoint. But what happens when the next generation tries to build on that foundation?" Ref-1101, p. 142.

Therefore it is true, absolutely and without exception, that everything is believed or nothing is believed. inerrancy - Masoretic textual techniques :

☪ "... the vowel points were invented by the Masoretes, starting with the fifth century A.D." Ref-0060, p. 126. "The Masoretes also annotated the text, as a precaution against any addition or omission, indicating in the margin the number of letters, the repetitions of certain expressions, the middle letter, and the word and the verse in the middle of each book or collection of books. In this copying of what we call the Old Testament, they noticed that the letter aleph occurs 42,377 times, the letter beth 38,218 times and so on. If a word seemed incorrect to them, they left it in the text (the kethib); and they put in the margin the consonants of the corrected word (the keri). Above all, the Masoretes invented vowel points: dots or little strokes added in or under consonants, to indicate the pronunciation of the word, while at the same time preserving the integrity of the traditional text." Ref-0060, p. 187. "According to the Hebrew Talmud, a body of civil and religious laws that also provided commentary on the Hebrew Scriptures, the rules for the scribes consisted of the following: 1. The skins of the parchments had to be prepared in a special way and dedicated to God so that they would be clean in order to have God's words written on them. 2. The ink that was used was black and made in accordance to a special recipe used only for writing Scripture. 3. The words written could not be duplicated by memory but must be reproduced from an authentic copy that the scribe had before him. And the scribe had to say each word aloud as he wrote it. 4. Each time the scribe came across the Hebrew word for God, he had to wipe his pen clean. And when he came across the name of God, Jehovah (YHWH), he had to wash his whole body before he could write it. 5. If a sheet or parchment had one mistake on it, the sheet was condemned. If there were three mistakes found on any page, the whole manuscript was condemned. Each scroll had to be checked within thirty days of its writing, or it was considered unholy. 6. Every word and every letter was counted. If a letter or word was omitted, the manuscript was condemned. 7. There were explicit rules for how many letters and words were allowed on any given parchment. A column must have at least forty-eight lines and no more than sixty. Letters and words had to be spaced at a certain distance and no word could touch another. . . . There were over twenty rules for scribes to follow when copying the sacred text. These rules are found throughout the Talmud in places such as Tractates Erubin, Sota, Megillah, Menachot and many more. Because of such strict rules that have been faithfully followed throughout the centuries the textual differences are extremely miniscule. For example, there are 304,805 letters found in the Torah. For hundreds of years, the Yemenite community was not part of the Jewish global checking system. Yet when compared there are only nine letter-differences found in the Yemenite Torah with that of the Jewish global community. . . ." Ref-0086, pp. 110-111 "The purpose of the Masorah [notes] in the narrow sense was to preserve the integrity of scripture precisely, so that nothing would be added to the text or taken away. The Masoretic notes gave specific instructions regarding words and phrases where an error in writing might occur. This was a form of quality control by which the text was preserved without significant change. In the broad sense of Masorah, the purpose included, not only writing, but also the proper pronunciation of Scripture. The vowel and accent signs preserved the correct reading tradition and intonation of the words." Ref-0842, p. 2. "There were three broad traditions of Masoretes in antiquity, corresponding to three different pronunciation traditions and three different graphic systems for the vowels and accent signs: Palestinian, Babylonian, and Tiberian. The Tiberian tradition eventually gained dominance over the other two, and it is the tradition best known today. . . . BHS is based on a manuscript in the Tiberian tradition." Ref-0842, p. 13. "We can narrow the beginning of the use of graphic signs for vowels and accents to the time period 600-750 C.E. . . . Dotan has argued from the Babylonian and Palestinian systems and from Rabbinic evidence that the accents were introduced prior to the vowel signs." Ref-0842, p. 15. "Eventually, many copyists had no understanding of the Masorah, and its purpose--to preserve the text tradition--was nullified. The Masoretic notes were copied in the wrong places, were used as fillers, and worst of all, were copied into ornate patterns as decorations for the manuscripts. The manuscripts show how serious study of Masorah and text tradition had decreased toward the end of the Middle Ages." Ref-0842, p. 23.

inerrancy - partial : Ex. 20:14; Deu. 5:18 ☪ "Evangelicals who believe the Scripture is not inerrant can offer no reason for thinking that copying mistakes must always be restricted to matters of history and science, while being absolutely precluded from texts touching on matters of faith and practice (the alleged exclusive domain of 'infallibility' according to many theorists). inerrancy - Spurgeon : ☉ + "Charles Haddon Spurgeon was deeply involved in the changing fortunes of the Baptists as they moved away from a belief in inerrancy. Spurgeon, who was undoubtedly the best known and most popular preacher of his age, bore witness to the traditional view of the Bible. He delivered a sermon in 1855, a part of which was devoted to biblical infallibility. He said: "Then, since God wrote it, mark its truthfulness. If I had written it, there would be worms of critics who would at once swarm on it, and would cover it with their evil spawn; had I written it, there would be men who would pull it to pieces at once, and perhaps quite right too. But this is the Word of God. Come, search, ye critics, and find a flaw: examine it from its Genesis to its Revelation and find an error. This is a vein of pure gold, unalloyed by quartz or any earthy substance. This is a star without a speck; a sun without a blot; a light without darkness; a moon without paleness; a glory without a dimness. O Bible! It cannot be said of any other book, that it is perfect and pure; but of thee we can declare all wisdom is gathered up in thee, without a particle of folly. This is the judge that ends the strife where wit and reason fail. This is the book untainted by any error, but it is pure, unalloyed, perfect truth. Why? Because God wrote it. Ah! Charge God with error if you please; tell Him that His book is not what it ought to be. . . . Blessed Bible, though art all truth." [Russell H. Conwell, The Life of Charles Haddon Spurgeon (Edgewood Publishing Co., 1892), pp. 574-576.] Ref-1101, pp. 66-67.

inerrancy - Ussher : ☉ "Whereas Ussher conceded that both the Old and New Testaments contained copyists' errors, a compromise for which he is to be blamed, to his credit he did not allow this to justify his altering a single verse of the Masoretic Text in constructing his chronology system." Ref-0186, p. 8.

inerrancy - vs. infallibility : ☉ "As far as etymology is concerned, the meaning of inerrancy and infallibility should of course be the same. Inerrancy derives from the Latin noun error, meaning error or mistake, whereas infallibility derives from the Latin verb fallo, meaning to deceive or lead astray. Given these root meanings, it's clear that infallibility and inerrancy should mean substantially the same thing. That they don't derives from some fancy footwork. Within evangelical circles the idea that Scripture does not err in matters of faith and practice, but can err in other matters has gained wide currency. It is this view that goes by the name of infallibility. Though perhaps initially appealing, infallibility so-defined constitutes an incoherent view of Scripture. The problem is that within Scripture, matters of faith and practice are inextricably tied together with matters of history and science. Presumably the Ten Commandments are the very words of God, but the divine command to exterminate all the Amalekites was not. Infallibilists have no clear criterion for distinguishing the things that Scripture gets right from the things it gets wrong." The Problem of Error in Scripture, William A. Dembski, Ref-0059, Vol. 3, No. 3, Nov./Dec. 1995, p. 7. "The terms 'inerrancy' and 'infallibility' seem to us practically interchangeable. . . . The fact is that if Scripture is infallible, it cannot err; and if it is inerrant, this is because it contains no mistakes." Ref-0060, p. 120. "The importance of the doctrine of inspiration to inerrancy cannot be overstated. As a matter of fact, until the last century one was thought to be identical with the other. To deny inerrancy was to deny inspiration." Ref-0064, p. 277. "Paul D. Feinberg, 'Infallibility and Inerrancy,' Trinity Journal 6, no. 2 (Fall 1977): 120, crisply articulates critical inerrancy as 'the claim that when all facts are known, the scriptures in their original autographs and properly interpreted will be shown to be without error in all that they affirm to the degree of precision intended, whether that affirmation relates to doctrine, history, science, geography, geology, etc.'" Ref-0110, p. 23. "We deny that it is possible for the Bible to be at the same time infallible and errant in its assertions. Infallibility and inerrancy may be distinguished but not separated. . . . We deny that Biblical infallibility and inerrancy are limited to spiritual, religious, or redemptive themes, exclusive of assertions in the fields of history and science." Nevertheless, it is the instrument of God's revelation to us, for it is a record of God's personal revelation in Christ. Revelation, however, is personal; the Bible is not a verbally inspired revelation from God, It is merely an errant human means through which one can encounter the personal revelation who is Christ. In itself it is not the Word of God: at best, the Bible only becomes the Word of God to the individual when he encounters Christ through it." [Existential view.] Ref-0075, p. 175. "In summary, for a neo-evangelical the Bible is a religious book, a book of salvation. Its purpose is to save and it is infallible in accomplishing that purpose. But it is not inerrant in all its statements. Only the saving 'core' is true, not the cultural 'husk' in which it is presented. Inspiration is dynamic and 'organic.' It does not guarantee the inerrancy of all historical and scientific statements in Scripture but only the infallibility of the saving purpose of the Scripture." Ref-0075, p. 180. inspiration - Paul says not I, but the Lord : 1Cor. 7:10; 1Cor. 7:12; 1Cor. 14:37 ☩ "Is this not proof positive in the text of Scripture that the Word of God must be distinguished from the fallible opinions of its human authors? Although one may interpret what Paul has to say in this way, it is neither necessary nor best. In verse 10 (1Cor. 7:10), Paul is pointing out that what he is saying has been said before by our Lord, while in verse 12 (1Cor. 7:12) Paul is the vehicle of new revelation. That is, what he says has not been said before. Later, in 1Cor. 14:37, he says that what he wrote is the command of the Lord. Thus the distinction is not between revelation and nonrevelation, infallible and fallible, but is a distinction within revelation (the infallible) between what is repeated by Paul and what is original with him." Ref-0787, pp. 118-119. "Already during the temple era there is evidence for considerable preoccupation with minutiae such as conjunctions and particles in the interpretation of the text, e.g., the tradition that Zechariah ben ha-Kazzav based legal decisions on the preservation of a waw (TB Sotah 28a). The legalistic discussions of Hillel the Elder and Shammai in the time of Herod presupposed a text fixed in small details. The same is true of Nahum of Gimzo, Akiba's mentor. Nevertheless, it was Akiba who became the principal spokesman of this concern for textual minutiae. For him the sanctity of Scripture meant that each letter, syllable, and word of the Torah was important. Even the title was the inspiration for a multiplicity of interpretative rules." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 pp. 4:805-814.

inspiration - verbal - Eugene Nida denies :

☉ + "In The Theory and Practice of Translation, Nida and Charles Taber explain their views more fully. They explain that translators need ?a shift in some of the attitudes which tend to place the source languages on a theological pedestal and to bow down before them in blind submission. . . . Greek and Hebrew are just "languages," with all the excellencies and liabilities that every language tends to have. They are neither the languages of heaven nor the speech of the Holy Spirit.' But if Nida thinks that the Greek and Hebrew words of the original manuscripts of the Bible are not "speech of the Holy Spirit," then it makes sense that he would not see the need to preserve and translate the meaning of every word." intelligence - information as evidence : ☩ + “5421 anthropologists who discovered the ancient cave paintings in Lascaux, France, knew of only one cause capable of producing representational art. Consequently, they inferred the past activity and presence of intelligent agents. Moreover, they could make this inference confidently without any other evidence that intelligent agents had been present, because the presence of the paintings alone established the probable presence of the only known type of cause--intelligence--of such a thing.” Ref-1219, par. 5421. “Scientists in many fields recognize the connection between intelligence and information and make inferences accordingly. Archaeologists assume that a scribe produced the inscriptions on the Rosetta Stone. Evolutionary anthropologists establish the intelligence of early hominids from chipped flints that are too improbably specified in form and function to have been produced by natural causes. NASA’s search for extraterrestrial intelligence (SETI) presupposes that any specified information imbedded [sic] in electromagnetic signals coming from space would indicate an intelligent source.” Ref-1219, par. 5672. “Visitors to Mt. Rushmore in South Dakota infer the past action of intelligent design upon seeing some unusual shapes etched in the rock face. Why? The shapes on the hillside are certainly unusual and irregularly shaped, and thus, in this context, improbable. But beyond that, observers recognize a pattern in the shapes that they know from an independent realm of experience, from seeing the faces of ex-presidents in photographs or paintings. The patterns on the mountain match patterns the observers know from elsewhere.” Ref-1219, par. 5821. “Dawkins’ failure to have any answer at all when first questioned on the subject [of whether he knew of any biological process that could increase the information content of a genome] illustrates that his information analysis, as published in his essay, is completely uninformative. He based his analysis on the Shannon theory, which deals only with the statistics of information systems. This theory defines information as a numerical property calculated from the number of ways in which the system can be configured. In this concept, a random string of letters can have more ‘information’ than a meaningful sentence.” Alex Williams, “Inheritance of biological information--part II: redefining the ‘information challenge’” [http://creation.mobi/article/8012/] accessed 20110722.

☉ All the ancient Jewish writings -- the Mishnah, the Gemara, (the Talmud), the Midrashim and many others -- all regard this portion of Scripture as relating to the Messianic Person. The first rabbi to suggest otherwise was Rashi, around 1050 A.D. Every rabbi prior to Rashi, without exception, viewed this passage as describing Messiah. When Rashi first proposed that this passage spoke of the nation Israel, he sparked a fierce debate with his contemporaries -- including Rambam (Maimonides) who stated very clearly that Rashi was completely wrong in going contrary to the traditional Jewish viewpoint. Ref-0011, p. 54. "From the writing of Isaiah 53 in the 8th century B.C. until the 11th century A.D., all Jewish commentators believed this portion of Scripture spoke of the Messiah of Israel. The first to object to this view and thus suffer severe criticism from other commentators of his time was Rabbi Solomon Ben Isaac (also called Shlomo Yitzhaki), known as Rashi (A.D. 1040-1105). Rashi argued that Isaiah 53 describes the people of Israel as suffering for the sins of the Gentile nations. only in the last century have rabbis emphasized this interpretation and rejected the belief that Isaiah 53 speaks of the Messiah." Meno Kalisher, Isaiah 53 and the Messiah of Israel, Ref-0057, November/December 2007, p. 20.

Isa. 53 - Rabbi Moshe Le Sheich : Isa. 53 ☉ "Also from the second half of the sixteenth century are the writings of Rabbi Moshe Le Sheich, or Al shech, who was a disciple of Joseph Caro, author of the Shulchan Aruch. He, too, demanded that all Jewish interpreters return to the more traditional interpretation when he wrote: ? . . .our Rabbis with one voice accept and affirm the opinion that the prophet is speaking of King Messiah, and we shall ourselves also adhere to the same view. . . ." Ref-0011, p. 127.

Isa. 53 - Rabbi Naphtali ben Asher Altschuler (17th century) : Isa. 53 ☉ "I will now proceed to explain these verses of our own Messiah, who, God willing, will come speedily in our days! I am surprised that Rashi and Rabbi David Kimchi have not, with the Targum, applied them to the Messiah likewise." Ref-0011, p. 128.

(Perhaps the Ascension of Isaiah, a composite work of the 2nd century B.C. to the 4th century A.D. The oldest part tells of Isaiah's martyrdom under Manasseh.)" Ref-0073, p. 51. "An old tradition relates that he was martyred at some time in the reign of Manasseh, possibly by being sawn in two inside a hollow log (cf. Heb. 11:37). Since he records the death of Sennacherib (Isa. 37:37-38), it is fair to assume that Isaiah lived until after Sennacherib's death in 681 B.C." Ref-0001, p. 366. Questionable: Heb. 11:37 (?);

 Islam - god vs. Christian God : ☪ "While Islam today has much in common with Christianity on the essential attributes of God, there is wide divergence on His moral and relational attributes. Muslims and Christians may speak of the same subject, the true God, but they have different concepts of Him. . . . Jews have an incomplete picture of God's nature (their view being confined to the Old Testament only), Muslims have an inaccurate picture of His nature (based on the Qur'an and the Hadith), and only Christians have the complete and accurate view of His nature (based on the Bible)." Imad N. Shehadeh, "Do Muslims and Christians Believe in the Same God?," Ref-0200, vol. 161 no. 641, January-March 2004 (pp. 14-26), pp. 22-23. "The Arabic word Allah, of course, must be translated God. It is the word used by Arabic Christians at the present day, and was probably used by their ancestors before its adoption by Islam. To say 'Christians worship God and Muslims worship Allah' is like saying 'Englishmen worship God and Frenchmen worship Dieu.' The Arabic-speaker, Muslim or Christian, when he worships and speaks about Allah, is claiming to worship and speak about that transcendent reality whom the English-speaking Christian worships and refers to as 'God.'" W. Montgomery Watt, "Islamic Theology and the Christian Theologian," Hibbert Journal 49 (1950-1951): 244, cited by Imad N. Shehadeh, "Do Muslims and Christians Believe in the Same God?," Ref-0200, vol. 161 no. 641, January-March 2004 (pp. 14-26), p. 26. "For here lies the big impasse: Allah/God could not have been the source of both the Bible and the Qur'an since they have contradictory messages on the most fundamental issues, especially on the nature of God. From a Christian perspective God is the author of the Bible only. But from a Muslim perspective God is the author of both the Bible and the Qur'an, except that the present Bible is a corrupted version of the original one. . . . It is here that the issue of the nature of God comes into focus. Though Muslims and Christians may believe in the same God as subject, the nature of God as conceived by Islam is not at all identical to the nature of God within the Judeo-Christian faith." Imad N. Shehadeh, "Do Muslims and Christians Believe in the Same God?", Ref-0200, vol. 161 no. 641, January-March 2004 (pp. 14-26), p. 26.

13:8-9; Rom. 11:26 ☪ "Since all the remaining one-third [Zec. 13:8-9] become believers, at that point, all Israel and the Remnant of Israel become one and the same." Ref-0219, p. 799. "Tertullian discussed the future blessings and salvation of Israel when he said, "He [God] will favour with His acceptance and blessing the circumcision also, even the race of Abraham, which by and by is to acknowledge Him." He also urged Christians to anticipate eagerly and rejoice over the coming restoration of Israel: "[F]or it will be fitting for the Christian to rejoice, and not to grieve, at the restoration of Israel, if it be true, (as it is), that the whole of our hope is intimately united with the remaining expectation of Israel." Michael J. Vlach, "Rejection Then Hope: The Church's Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, p. 63. ". . . in his comments on the Song of Songs, Origen mentions "two callings of Israel." In between these two callings is God's call of the church. But after the call of the church Israel will experience salvation: For the Church was called between the two callings of Israel; that is to say, first Israel was called, and afterwards when Israel had stumbled and fallen, the Church of the Gentiles was called. "But when the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, then will all Israel, having been called again, be saved." . . . Origen's belief in a salvation of Israel can also be seen in his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans: Now indeed until all the Gentiles come to salvation the riches of God are concentrated in the multitude of believers, but as long as Israel remains in its unbelief it will not be possible to say that the fullness of the Lord's portion has been attained. The people of Israel are still missing from the complete picture. But when the fullness of the Gentiles has come in and Israel comes to salvation at the end of time, then it will be the people which, although it existed long ago, will come at the last and complete the fullness of the Lord's portion and inheritance." Michael J. Vlach, "Rejection Then Hope: The Church's Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, p. 63. "John Chrysostom (349-407), who often made harsh statements against the Jews, still believed in a future salvation of the Jews. He linked the coming salvation of the Jews with the coming of Elijah: *To show therefore that [Elijah] the Tishbite comes before that other [second] advent . . . He said this . . . And what is this reason? That when He is come, He may persuade the Jews to believe in Christ, and that they may not all utterly perish at His coming. Wherefore He too, guiding them on to that remembrance, saith, "And he shall restore all things," that is, shall correct the unbelief of the Jews that are then in being. . . . Like Chrysostom, Augustine, in his City of God, linked the salvation of the Jews with the coming of Elijah: In is a familiar theme in the conversation and heart of the faithful, that in the last days before the judgment the Jews shall believe in the true Christ, that is, our Christ, by means of this great and admirable prophet Elias who shall expound the law to them. . . . When, therefore, he is come, he shall give a spiritual explanation of the law which the Jews at present understand carnally, and shall thus "turn the heart of the father to the son," that is, the heart of the fathers to the children." Michael J. Vlach,*

"Rejection Then Hope: The Church's Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, pp. 63-64. "Augustine also argued that the church had not permanently supplanted the Jews: What! have we supplanted the Jews? No, but we are said to be their supplanters, for that for our sakes they were supplanted. If they had not been blinded, Christ would not have been crucified; His precious Blood would not be shed; if that Blood had not been shed, the world would not have been redeemed. Because then their blindness had profited us, therefore hath the elder brother been supplanted by the younger, and the younger is called the Supplanter. But how long shall this be? . . . The time will come, then end of the world will come, and all Israel shall believe; not they who now are, but their children who shall then be. Like Augustine, Jerome (347-420) believed in a future salvation of the Jews. He said, "[W]hen the Jews receive the faith at the end of the world, they will find themselves in dazzling light, as if our Lord were returning to them from Egypt." Michael J. Vlach, "Rejection Then Hope: The Church's Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, pp. 65-66. ". . . St. Cyril of Alexandria (378-444) stated with confidence that Israel would be saved after the calling of the Gentiles: "Although it was rejected, Israel will also be saved eventually, a hope which Paul confirms. . . . For indeed, Israel will be saved in its own time and will be called at the end, after the calling of the Gentiles." Michael J. Vlach, "Rejection Then Hope: The Church's Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, p. 67. "Writing in the last third of the fourth century, Ambrosiaster stated, "However seriously the Jews may have sinned by rejecting the gift of God . . . nevertheless, because they are the children of good people, those privileges and many benefits from God they have received, they will be received with joy when they return to the faith, because God's love for them is stirred up by the memory of their ancestors." . . . Cassiodorus (c. 485-585) linked the salvation of Israel with Psalm 102. Commenting on verse 9 -- "He will not always be angry, nor will he be wroth for ever" -- he declared, "This verse can be applied also to the Jewish people, who we know are to be converted at the world's end. On this Paul says: Blindness in part has happened in Israel, that the fullness of the Gentiles should come in, and so all Israel should be saved." When Cassiodorus states "we know" it appears that this belief in a future salvation of Israel was quite common in his day. He does not appear to be presenting an novel idea." Michael J. Vlach, "Rejection Then Hope: The Church's Doctrine of Israel in the Patristic Era", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 51:70, pp. 67-68. "Chafer and others hold that the term [all Israel in Romans 11:26] refers to Israel throughout history, and that they will be resurrected just before Jesus' second coming. Ryrie takes a different view. He says "all Israel" refers to those who survive the Tribulation and "turn to faith" to Jesus (Zech. 13:8). Others, such as Fruchtenbaum, say that Romans 11:26 teaches that "all Israel will be saved" after the Tribulation when the national leaders of Israel realize their error of rejecting Messiah Jesus and will lead the nation in a multi-day event of national confession, regeneration, and subsequent salvation. . . . Hoehner links the timing of Israel's salvation to the "time of forgiveness" in Zechariah 12:10, when Israel will "look upon [Him] whom they pierced; and they will mourn for Him." . . . Though these views differ slightly, they all see Paul's use of "all Israel" as referring to a future, national Israel." H. Wayne House, The Future of National Israel, Ref-0200 Volume 166 Number 664, October-December 2009, 463:481, pp. 478-479.

"it must be noted that any interpretation which suggests that the promises to the nation of Israel have been assigned to the church because of the failure of that nation raises the question of the security involved in all of God's elective purposes. According to Munck, Paul recognizes this connection in his epistle to the Romans; and thus, after affirming the security of the elect in Christ in chapter 8, he is forced to deal in chapters 9-11 with the future of Israel in the light of their apparent fall. Munck rightly argues: 'If God has not fulfilled his promises made to Israel, then what basis has the Jewish-Gentile church for believing that the promises will be fulfilled for them?'" Robert L. "Even the old Scottish amillenarian John Eadie . . . as far back as 1894 he writes in his Galatian commentary on Gal. 6:16: "There is no ground for such a departure as saying that Israel here means the church. The apostle Paul is not in the habit of calling the church made up of Jews and Gentiles -- Israel. Israel is used eleven times in Romans, but in all the instances it refers to Israel proper; and so do it and 'Israelites' in every portion of the NT. In the book of Revelation, the 144,000 sealed Israel stand in contrast to 'the great multitude which no man can number,' taken out of the Gentiles or non-Israelitish races. The apostle never in any place so uses the name Israel, never gives the grand old theocratic name to any but the chosen people. To the apostle there were two Israels -- 'they are not all Israel, which are of Israel,' -- and he says here, not Israel according to the flesh, but 'the Israel of God,' or the true believing Israel; his own brethren by a double tie -- by blood, and especially by grace. Was it unnatural for the apostle to do this, especially after rebuking false Israel -- the wretched Judaizers -- who certainly were not the Israel of God? Of course not!" God has two distinct programs in history, one for Israel and one for the church. 2. The church does not fulfill or take over any of Israel's promises or purposes. 3. The church age is a 'mystery,' and thus no Old Testament prophecies foresaw it. 4. The present church age is a 'parenthesis' or 'intercalation' during which God has temporarily suspended His primary purpose with Israel 5. The church age began at Pentecost and will end at the pretribulation rapture of the church before Christ's second coming. 6. The church, or body of Christ, consists only of those believers saved between Pentecost and the rapture. 7. The church as the body of Christ, therefore, does not include Old Testament believers." Issues such as infant baptism, the Lord's table as a sacrament, Sabbath keeping, the role of the law, tithing 10%, certain diets, ceremonial garments and rituals, modern prophecy and visions, eschatology, and many other issues largely have to do with how the Church is interpreted." In Jeremiah 31:10 it is plain that the same ones that will be gathered and restored to God are the ones whom He scattered in Jeremiah's day: Israel. This cannot be applied to the Church without denying the historic reality of the initial fulfillment in the scattering of Israel. "What I protest against is, the habit of allegorizing plain sayings of the Word of God concerning the future history of the nation Israel, and explaining away the fullness of their contents in order to accommodate them to the Gentile Church. I believe the habit to be unwarranted by anything in Scripture, and to draw after it a long train of evil consequences." J. C. Suppose he asks you if you believe in a literal personal advent of Messiah to reign over the earth in glory, a literal restoration of Judah and Israel to Palestine, a literal rebuilding and restoration of Zion and Jerusalem. Suppose the unconverted Jew puts these questions to you, what answer are you prepared to make? Will you dare to tell him that Old Testament prophecies of this kind are not to be taken in their plain literal sense? will you dare to tell him that the words Zion, Jerusalem, Jacob, Judah, Ephraim, Israel, do not mean what they seem to mean, but mean the Church of Christ? Will you dare to tell him that the glorious kingdom and future blessedness of Zion, so often dwelt upon in prophecy, mean nothing more than the gradual Christianizing of the world by missionaries and gospel preaching? Will you dare to tell him that you think it "carnal" to expect a literal rebuilding of Jerusalem, "carnal" to expect a literal coming of Messiah to reign? That the chronology of the period was correctly known is plain from the thirteenth chapter of the Acts, which enables us to reckon the very same era as 573 years. How then can this seeming error of 93 years be accounted for? It is precisely the sum of the several eras of the Servitudes."^[1] [1] - Acts 13:18-21 gives 40 years in the wilderness, 450 years under the Judges, and 40 years for the reign of Saul. To which must be added the 40 years of David's reign, and the first three years of Solomon for it was in his fourth year that he began to build the Temple. The servitudes were to Mesopotamia for 8 years, to Moab for 18 years, to Canaan for 20 years, to Midian for 7 years and to the Philistines for 40 years. See Judges 3:8,14; 4:2-3; 6:1; 13:1. But 8 + 18 + 20 + 7 + 40 years are precisely equal to 93 years." Ref-0745, pp. 89-90. "According to the book of Kings, Solomon began to build the temple in the 480th year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt.[1K. 6:1] This statement, than which none could, seemingly, be more exact, has sorely puzzled chronologers. By some it has been condemned as a forgery, by others it has been dismissed as a blunder; but all have agreed in rejecting it. Moreover, Scripture itself appears to clash with it. In his sermon at Pisidian Antioch St. Paul epitomizes thus the chronology of this period of the history of his nation: forty years in the wilderness; 450 years under the Judges, and forty years of the reign of Saul; making a total of 530 years. To which must be added the forty years of David's reign and the first three years of Solomon's; making 573 years for the very period which is described in Kings as 480 years. Can these conclusions, apparently so inconsistent, be reconciled? If we follow the history of Israel as detailed in the book of Judges, we shall find that for five several periods their national existence as Jehovah's people was in abeyance. In punishment for their idolatry, God gave them up again and again, and "sold them into the hands of their enemies." They became slaves to the king of Mesopotamia for eight years, to the king of Moab for eighteen years, to the king of Canaan for twenty years, to the Midianites for seven years, and finally to the Philistines for forty years.[Judges 3:8, 14; 4:2, 3; 6:1; 13:1. The servitude of Judges 10:7, 9 affected only the tribes beyond Jordan, and did not suspend Israel's national position.] But the sum of 8 + 18 + 20 + 7 + 40 years is 93 years, and if 93 years be deducted from 573 years, the result is 480 years. It is obvious, therefore, that the 480 years of the book of Kings from the Exodus to the temple is a mystic era formed by eliminating every period during which the people were cast off by God. If, then, this principle were intelligible to the Jew in regard to history, it was both natural and legitimate to introduce it in respect of an essentially mystic era like that of the seventy weeks." "Some have assumed that Stephen was citing either the Septuagint or the Proto-Septuagint text of Qumran in giving the number as seventy-five (Acts 7:14 and Exodus 1:5). Yet, this can also be explained by the way the family was numbered and not the text Stephen was citing. . . In Genesis 46:8-26 we have a total of sixty-six children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren of Jacob. When we add Jacob to this list with Joseph and his two sons we have a total of seventy. The number given by Stephen in Acts 7:14 of seventy-five (which does not include Jacob himself) could also be correct if Stephen was counting the wives of Jacob's children, something the New Testament would do since it is much more inclusive regarding gender. Both Judah and Simeon were widowers. Therefore, to the sixty-six persons already mentioned, we add nine wives (not counting Joseph, his wife, and children because they were already in Egypt). Using this method of counting, the number seventy-five is correct." Ref-0086, p. 135. "A comparison of Genesis 46:5-27 with Acts 7:14 reveals three different statements as to the number of family members in that southward moving caravan -- 66, 70, and 75. As a result, when interpreting the Acts 7:14 passage nearly all modern scholars inform us that the Septuagint (LXX) confirms in reading "75" in Genesis 46:26-27 (and at Ex. 1:5) whereas the Hebrew text supposedly errs and contradicts Acts in recording "70" in the Genesis passage. . . . The scholars continue by adding that the 5 missing names in the Hebrew text are preserved in the LXX at Genesis 46:20 where Machir, the son of Manasseh, and Machir's son Galaad (Hebrew = Gilead) are recorded along with Ephraim's two son's Taam (Hebrew = Tahan) and Sutalaam (Hebrew = Shuthelah) and his son Edom (Hebrew = Eran). We are further informed that as the Hebrew text contradicts the Acts account regarding the number of Jacob's family that traveled down to Egypt . . . the Hebrew text is corrupt here (and at Deu. 10:22 as well as Ex. 1:5 as they also record "70") and must be corrected by the LXX to bring the count into agreement. . . . Is it really reasonable or likely that Stephen (having been dragged in before the Sanhedrin by a mob and now in the middle of a spirit filled address before the very men who had caused the death of his Lord -- while speaking as a Hebrew to the Hebrews) would have quoted from a GREEK Old Testament manuscript of Genesis in which five names and been added in violation of the Hebrew laws governing Scripture transmission? . . . Acts 7:14 and Genesis 46:27 are not referring to the same entity. Again three totals (66, 70, and 75) are given . . . First, Genesis 46:26 states that 66 souls came "with" Jacob to Egypt . . . these 66 are said to have come "out of his loins". Beginning at Genesis 46:9 and going through verse 25, we find 66 males listed of which two (Er and Onan, vs. 12) have already died leaving a total of 64 males. If we now add the two girls from verses 15 (Dinah, a daughter) and 17 (Serah, a granddaughter), we account for the 66 souls "from Jacob's loins" who came with him to Egypt (Gen. 46:26) . . . The solution to the 66 and 70 predicament is quite unambiguous . . . Genesis 46:27 adds Joseph and his two sons (Manasseh & Ephraim, vs. 20), all 3 of whom were already down in Egypt. This brings are running total to 66 + 3 = 69. As the "66" are said to have been those who came with Jacob, he has not yet been included. Now we do so and obtain the 70 souls included in the term, "the house of Jacob" (v. 27). Indeed, the biblical definition for "the house of Jacob" is clearly stated as being Jacob and "all his seed" which would include Joseph and his two sons (vs. 27, cp. vs. 6). This total may also be obtained by merely adding the 33 of verse 15 [which includes Jacob himself] the 16 (vs. 18), the 14 (vs. 22), and the 7 (vs. 25). . . Here [Acts 7:15] a genuine contradiction is perceived by many; were there 70 or 75? Stephen . . . is speaking of a different entity which he calls Jacob's "kindred". The terms "house of Jacob" and "kindred", though similar, are not synonymous. . . . Jacob's "kindred" that Joseph "sent" for to come "to him" (Acts 7:14) are the 66 already cited plus the wives of his sons that came down to Egypt with their father. Moreover, it is back in Genesis 46:26 where we are given the clue that these wives are the key to differentiating between the "70" and "75". There we read that 66 souls came with Jacob down to Egypt: "besides Jacob's son's wives". These daughters-in-law were not included as having to do with the "house of Jacob" (Gen. 46:26) which numbered only those "who came out of his loins", but they are part of Jacob's "kindred" that Joseph sent for. Now Jacob had twelve sons (Gen. 35:22). To determine how many wives went down to Egypt, we simply take the 75 "kindred", subtract the 77 who came from Jacob's loins . . . and obtain only nine rather than twelve. That is 9 of the 75 "kindred" that came . . . did not come from his loins, and Gen. 46:26 has alerted us to the fact that they are the son's wives. Therefore, 3 of the 12 son's wives (12 - 9 = 3) were not numbered in the "kindred". . . . we must immediately exclude Joseph's wife for she was already in Egypt . . . A second is found early at Genesis 38:12 where we learn that Judah's wife had died previously. Thus, one of the other son's must also have become a widower. We may deduce that it was almost certainly Simeon as special attention is called to the fact that Shaul, his youngest son, was by a Canaanitess (Gen. 46:10). . . . Manifestly, the LXX that is today extant has been proven spurious for Manasseh and Ephraim are for too young to be fathers when Josephs "kindred" went down to him in Egypt -- much less grandfathers! The reading in the LXX is grossly untenable. Thus, the "5 missing names" in the Hebrew text at Genesis 46:20 . . . are seen to have been interpolated by conjecture . . . in the LXX. The author of the LXX has tried to force Genesis 46:20 to conform to Acts 7:14." Ref-0186, pp. 68-71.

"Although not common knowledge, the mathematics imposed upon the chronology of Scripture context demand that Jacob took his wives, Leah and Rachel, almost immediately upon coming to his uncle Laban's . . . Otherwise, Judah would have been born too late for all the details of his life given in Genesis 38 to have occurred." Ref-0186, p. 64. "Whereas Ussher had placed Jacob's arrival at Haran around B.C. 1760 and his marriages to Leah and Rachel during that same year . . . , Bishop Lloyd altered Jacob's wedding date, having him wait seven years before acquiring his brides (B.C. 1753). . . . Jacob did not say "Give me my wife, for my years are fulfilled." He said "for my days are fulfilled" (Gen. 29:21). This implies a certain number of days from the time the contract was made until he could actually take Rachel to wife. . . . The 7 years (vs. 18) of service were the total dowry and not the customary waiting period. The "few days" of Gen. 29:20 could have been the month of verse 14 and he contract could have been made at the beginning of these 30 days. Verse 15 implies that Jacob had already been working or "serving" Laban in order to earn his keep. . . . Jacob actually received both wives within a week of each other . . . As it may be proved that Leah became his wife at the beginning of the total 14 years dowry period . . . then Rachel had to have also become his wife at this time. . . . It is not feasible that Jacob obtained Leah (and Rachel a week later) at the end of the first 7 year period because that would not allow enough time for all the children to be born." Jamnia - council of : ☺ + " . . . the purpose of the council was not to decide the status of any book of the Bible, but rather to discuss how to resolve interpretive problems in the Bible. The problems included Ezekiel's contradiction of Mosaic law in his vision of the reconstituted Temple (Ezekiel 40-48), the problem of philosophical skepticism in Ecclesiastes, the lack of a direct reference to God in the book of Esther, and the issue of eroticism in the Song of Songs. It is clear from the nature of this discussion that the Jewish sages already recognized these writings' canonical status, and this status required them to resolve the interpretive problems." Ref-0818, p. 148. "Leiman's groundbreaking study of the canon has led many scholars to revise their views about the role of the so-called Synod of Jamnia in the canonization of the Old Testament. He emphasized that the discussions at Jamnia did not close the biblical canon or even canonize "any books at all." Discussions about the canon dealt only with books that were already considered part of the canon, such as Ezekiel or Ecclesiastes. Thus, it is not correct to think that the rabbis at Jamnia "closed" the canon and decided on where to place Daniel. Beckwith has amassed a plethora of evidence to demonstrate that by at least the middle of the second century B.C. Jews recognized all of the Old Testament as authoritative Scripture." Thomas J. Finley, "The Book of Daniel in the Canon of Scripture", Ref-0200, Vol. 165 No. 658, April-June 2008, 195:208, p. 197.

Jehovah - corruption of Adonai and YHWH : ☪ "Perhaps the most famous (and frequent) example of a qere reading is the covenant name of God, Jehovah. This name is written with the four consonants YHWH, going back to an original pronunciation, Yahweh. The proper, original rendering of Jehovah, therefore, is Yahweh. . . . But the Jews as early as Nehemiah's time began to feel qualms about pronouncing the holy name, lest they bring upon themselves possible penal consequences under the third commandment. It therefore became accepted practice to substitute the title 'Lord' (aDoNaY) for the name Yahweh whenever reading it aloud. To indicate this substitution, the Masoretes inserted the vowels ?aDoNaY under the consonants of JaHWeH, resulting in the appearance of JeHoWaH or 'Jehovah.' Misunderstanding this qere, European scholars of the Renaissance period (when Hebrew became avidly studied in Europe) supposed that the proper pronunciation of the name was 'Jehovah' -- and so it has come down to us today." Ref-0001, p. 71. ". . . the Tetragrammaton [YHWH], read either as Adonay or as Elohim. . ." (emphasis mine) Ref-0090, xiv-xv. See Ref-0112, p. 32 for detailed examples. "Another type of deliberate change in reading due, in this case, to reverence, is the Divine name יהוה or יהוה The Divine name was considered too sacred to be pronounced; so the consonants of this word were written in the text (Kethibh), but the word read (Qere) was יהוה (meaning 'Lord'). The consonants of the (Kethibh) יהוה were given the vowels of the (Qere) יהוה namely 'y', producing the impossible form יהוה (Y'hōwā). Since, however, the Divine name occurs so often in the Bible, the printed editions do not put the reading required (Qere) in the margin or footnote; the reader is expected to substitute the Qere for Kethibh, without having his attention drawn to it every time it occurs. For this reason it has been called Qere Perpetuum, i.e. permanent Qere." Ref-0128, p. 23.

To the four consonants YHWH of the Name [YHWH], which had come to be regarded as too sacred to be pronounced, they attached vowel sings indicating that in its place should be read the Hebrew word Adonai meaning 'Lord'. . . . The form 'Jehovah' is of late medieval origin; it is a combination of the consonants of the Divine Name and the vowels attached to it by the Masoretes but belonging to an entirely different word."  ☉ "Its shorter and longer versions have presented a challenge to scholars in understanding the transmission history of the Hebrew text. The shorter form exists in the Septuagint and in one of the Dead Sea Scrolls, while the longer form is in the Masoretic Text. It may be that two editions of the book of Jeremiah existed, as implied by Jeremiah 36:32 and the statement that after King Jehoiakim had burned the scroll of Jeremiah's prophecies, Jeremiah's scribe Baruch wrote another scroll of prophecies and "added many similar things to them." Since the Septuagint was translated in Egypt, where Jeremiah had been taken captive, perhaps the shorter version had remained in circulation there, while the longer version had been taken back to Israel with those returning after the Exile." Ref-0818, pp. 40-41 "Six copies of Jeremiah [from Qumran] have the longer form of the text, in agreement with the Masoretic Text, but two (4QJer^{b,d}) have the shorter, in agreement with the Septuagint. The latter also lack words, names, and sentences, and exhibit a different sequence in some places." Ref-0818, pp. 98-99. "... the Greek version of Jeremiah [from the Dead Sea Scrolls] is significantly shorter than MT Jeremiah. Moreover, the contents of the Greek form of the book are found in a sequence quite different from the more familiar sequence of the Hebrew version. It has long been thought that the Greek version of Jeremiah was translated from a Hebrew text that also contained these substantial differences, although no Hebrew manuscript supported such a claim. The discovery of some fragments of Jeremiah at Qumran, however, has now provided a Hebrew text that closely matches the Greek version of Jeremiah. It appears to reflect the long minus and the sequence of material found in the Greek. In addition, the Qumran text agrees in characteristic details with the Greek version, making it probable that the translator's Vorlage was quite similar to a Hebrew text that had remained unknown for two thousand years." Ref-0838, p. 173. "One must remember, however, that the conclusions offered by scholars rest on a very small sample of actual Hebrew text and a great deal on a reasonable, but nonetheless hypothetical, reconstruction. Furthermore, although these fragments of Jeremiah contain readings that agree with the LXX against the MT, they also contain several readings that agree with the MT against the LXX. It is not, therefore, as if what little Hebrew text survives in 4QJer^{b,d} exactly matches the corresponding Greek text of Jeremiah. . . . Tov argues that the Book of Jeremiah existed in two distinct Hebrew forms: a shorter edition from which the extant Greek was translated, and an expanded edition that became the MT. He proposes that the shorter text of Jeremiah--reflected by 4QJer^{b,d} and the Greek version--is the older edition of Jeremiah." Ref-0838, p. 175. "The four major differences are there: (a) the Septuagint is much shorter, lacking about one-eighth of the Masoretic text. Peterson estimates that the Septuagint is approximately three thousand words (about 15 percent) shorter than the Masoretic text; (b) the Septuagint has about one hundred words not found in the Masoretic text; (c) the oracles to the foreign nations in the Masoretic text are in chapters 46-51, but in the Septuagint these chapters follow 25:13 as chapters 26-31, and 25:14 is omitted in the Septuagint; and (d) the Babylonians are addressed at the end of the foreign-nations section in the Masoretic text in chapters 50-51, whereas they are mentioned in the Septuagint in chapters 27-28 as the second in the list of nations." Insofar as these three passages speak of it, it concerns the rebuilding of the Temple, but does not actually mention the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem." Ref-0011, p. 140. "The date of this decree varies. Hoehner sets it as October 29, 539 B.C. Pusey. . . . in 536 B.C. By far the most common date given for this edict is 538-37 B.C." Paul D. Feinberg, "An Exegetical and Theological Study of Daniel 9:24-27", Ref-0198, p. 191. "This author's own view is that the decree of which Daniel is speaking is the decree of Cyrus. I believe this for five reasons. First, this is a real decree; it is in the actual form of a decree. Second, this is the one given within a year or so of the vision of the Seventy Sevens. The year Daniel received the Seventy Sevens vision was the same year Cyrus passed his decree. Third, this is the decree that is emphasized in Scripture. It was spoken of prophetically about 150 years before it happened by Isaiah in 44:28 and 45:1,13. In fact, Isaiah actually named the one who would issue this decree; he named Cyrus, at least 150 years before it ever occurred. What Isaiah prophesied is recorded in fulfillment four times: 2 Chronicles 36:22-23; Ezra 1:1-4, 6:1-5, and 6:6-12. This is clearly the decree that is emphasized in Scripture. The fourth reason why I choose the decree of Cyrus is that this decree did include the rebuilding of the city. I realize that the four passages mentioned earlier did not actually mention the rebuilding of the city but only the rebuilding of the Temple. However, if Isaiah's prophecies are taken literally, it would have included the rebuilding of the city. For example, Isaiah 44:28 and 45:13 clearly mention that Cyrus would not only allow the Temple to be rebuilt, he would also allow the city to be rebuilt. Of course, it is silly to think Cyrus would allow a temple to be rebuilt and then forbid anyone to live anywhere near the Temple by not allowing the city to be rebuilt as well. The fifth reason why I think the Cyrus decree is throne of which it speaks is that it is clear from parallel pages that the Jews did rebuild the city. In fact, they rebuilt the city before Nehemiah ever came to rebuild the walls. In Haggai 1:2-4, seventy years before Nehemiah arrived, the Jews were already living in private homes in Jerusalem though the Temple itself had not as yet been rebuilt. Certainly the would not dare to rebuild Jerusalem if they did not have permission to do so. According to Ezra 4:12, the city was being built even in Ezra's day and Ezra preceded the time of Nehemiah. . . . I realize that when our own system of chronology is compared to the Persian system of chronology, it produces an apparent 52-year gap, but this has been explained by Dr David L. Cooper in his book Messiah: His First Coming Scheduled. The details of the explanation are complex and technical. . . . It can be said that the Seventy Sevens began with the issuing of the decree of Cyrus, and the first 483 years, that is the first Sixty-nine Sevens, terminated with the birth of Jesus." "A third date for the terminus a quo is the seventh year of Artaxerxes, 458-57 BC. . . . The chief objection to this date is that the decree deals with the rebuilding of the Temple, not the city." Paul D. Feinberg, "An Exegetical and Theological Study of Daniel 9:24-27", Ref-0198, p. 193.

Jerusalem - decree to rebuild No.4 : Dan. 9:25; Ne. 2:1-8 ☪ "Decree of Artaxerxes to Nehemiah that was passed in 444-443 B.C. . . . In its context is speaking about the rebuilding of the walls. . . . Most evangelical scholars today believe that the decree Daniel is speaking of is the decree of Artaxerxes to Nehemiah. . . . first popularized by Sir Robert Anderson in his book The Coming Prince. He carefully figured out the beginning with the decree of Artaxerxes to Nehemiah by counting off the number of years through a formula and terminating the 483 years to the coming of the Messiah with the Triumphal Entry in the year 32 A.D. According to Sir Robert Anderson, this period began on March 14, 445 B.C. until April 6, 32 A.D. . . . In the light of the time of the Passover occurrences, it was impossible for the crucifixion to have occurred in the year 32 A.D. Insofar as when the Passover occurred, there are only two options in that time span and they are the years 30 and 33 A.D. Harold Horner wrote a book which corrected Sir Robert Anderson's miscalculations; he, too, begins with the decree of Artaxerxes to Nehemiah and begins it with March 4, 444 B.C., and terminates it in March 29, 33 A.D., also with the Triumphal Entry." Ref-0011, p. 140. Ref-0043 Ref-0044 "After allowing all due consideration for the various differences in computing these years, the prophecy remains unshaken. Its terminus ad quem, within close limits is fixed and must fall somewhere within the earthly career of Jesus of Nazareth. If He is not the Messianic King of Old Testament prophecy, then prophecy has failed, and we can have no certain hope that there will ever be any such king." Ref-0183, p. 173. "The final date that we shall consider is that of 445-44 B.C., which was the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes (Ne. 2:1-8). . . . a number of commentators reject this date because they think the decree is not a major one. It simply reaffirms an earlier existing edict and enlarges upon it. Further, if we take 445-44 as the beginning of the seventy weeks, then the first sixty-nine weeks will come to a close in either A.D. 32 or A.D. 33. Because Daniel 9:26 demands that Messiah will be 'cut off' after sixty-nine weeks, we have a late date for the crucifixion. Finally, this date relies for its calculations on a prophetic or 360-day year." Paul D. Feinberg, "An Exegetical and Theological Study of Daniel 9:24-27", Ref-0198, pp. 194-195. "The Book of Ezra records three several decrees of Persian kings, relating to the Jews. The opening verses record the edict of Cyrus, which authorizes the return of the exiles. But this decree mentioned only the temple and not the city; and moreover it referred to the era of the Servitude, and not of the Desolations, which later era it was that Daniel had in view. The sixth chapter records a decree issued by Darius Hystaspis to confirm the decree of Cyrus, but this in no way extended the scope of the earlier edict. The seventh chapter records a third decree, issued by Artaxerxes Longimanus in his seventh year, but this again related merely to the temple and its worship (Ezra 7:19,27). The Book of Ezra therefore will be searched in vain for what we seek, but the book which follows it gives it fully and explicitly. . . . Artaxerxes forthwith granted [Nehemiah's] petition, and issued an edict to give effect to it (Ne. 2:5). This occurred in the beginning of the Jewish year; and before the Feast of Tabernacles, in the seventh month, Jerusalem was once more a city, enclosed by gates and ramparts. . . . This was a revival of the political existence of Judah; and therefore no doubt it was that the event was divinely chosen as the beginning of the prophetic era of the seventy weeks. It is certain moreover, that this edict of Artaxerxes is the only "commandment to restore and build Jerusalem" recorded in history, and that under this "commandment" Jerusalem was in fact rebuilt." Ref-0745, pp.125-129. "Julius . . . rejected the decree of Cyrus as the terminus a quo in favor of the decree of Artaxerxes in the twentieth year of his reign (since the city and its walls were never built in the era following Cyrus's decree). He stated, 'It [the city] remained in this position, accordingly, until Nehemiah and the reign of Artaxerxes, and the 115th year of the sovereignty of the Persians. . . . And reckoning from that point, we make up seventy weeks to the time of Christ. For if we begin to reckon from any other point, and not from this, the periods will not correspond, and very many odd results will meet us. For if we begin the calculation of the seventy weeks from Cyrus and the first restoration, there will be upwards of one hundred years too many, and there will be a larger number if we begin from the day on which the angel gave the prophecy to Daniel, and a much larger number still if we begin from the commencement of the captivity.' [Julius Africanus, The Extant Fragments of the Five Books of the Chronography of Julius Africanus, in The Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol. 6, ed. Alexander Roberts and James Donaldson (Edinburgh, 1867; reprint, Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1989), 16.2.] Elsewhere, Julius wrote more precisely that his calculations began with the twentieth year of Artaxerxes. "And the beginning of the numbers, that is, of the seventy weeks which make up 490 years, the angel instructs us to take from the going forth of the commandment to answer and rebuild Jerusalem. And this happened in the twentieth year of the reign of Artaxerxes king of Persia." [Ibid., 16.1] Apparently he saw the terminus ad quem as being the time from Christ was baptized and entered into His public ministry, because he based his calculations on Luke 3:1, which mentions the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar. . . . According to Julius this results in a span of 475 years. He argued, however, that 490 years (seventy weeks) is equivalent to 475 years when viewed according to Hebrew numeration. The Jews, he said, reckoned a year as 354 days rather than 365 1/4 days. The former represents twelve months according to the moon's course, while the latter is based on the solar year. . . . Julius is unique among the church fathers. First, he was the first one to take the terminus a quo as the twentieth year of Artaxerxes. Second, he viewed the terminus ad quem as the fifteenth year of Tiberius, the beginning of Jesus' public ministry." J. Paul Tanner, *Is Daniel's Seventy-Weeks Prophecy Messianic? The surrounding of the city marked the sign that Jesus had promised, and the Jewish believers knew that Jerusalem would soon be destroyed. Jesus had commanded the Jewish believers to desert the city when they saw this happening. However, it was impossible to do so while the Romans were surrounding the city. Then Cestus Gallus noticed that his supply lines were not secure, so he lifted the siege of Jerusalem in order to go back to Caesarea. On the way, he was attacked by Jewish forces and killed. Temporarily, the city was no longer surrounded by armies, so every single Jewish believer was able to leave Jerusalem. Jesus - tempted : Mtt. 4:1; Mark 1:13; Luke 4:2; 1Cor. 10:9 (KJV); Heb. 2:18; Heb. 4:15; Jas. 1:13 ☉ In some passages [Acts 5:9; Acts 15:10; 1Cor. 10:9; Heb. 3:9] temptation peirozo is applied to the other members of the Godhead Who have no humanity and certainly could not even potentially sin. Therefore, temptation does not require susceptibility in order to be a real experience. The peccability of Jesus (theoretical ability to sin) is not required for Him to have experienced real temptation. In view of Mtt. 4:1 and Jas. 1:13 if Jesus could have sinned then God (the Holy Spirit) was violating Jas. 1:13. This lends further support that Jesus could not have sinned and that the temptation of Jesus recorded in Mtt. 4:1 was to prove and illustrate His sinless identity prior to His ministry. If Christ had the potential to sin when on earth and He is unchangeable (Heb. 13:8), then what prevents Him from sinning today in heaven (still in His humanity)? Satan tempted Jesus with "the lust of the flesh" (Mtt. 4:2,3); "the lust of the eyes" (Mtt. 4:8,9); and "the pride of life" (Mtt. 4:5,6) as described in 1Jn. 2:16. Palmer Robertson and the signatories of An Open Letter to Evangelicals, there is yet for these "Jews" no nation, no land, no covenant relationship in any sense that abides according to the original promise made to Abraham. That, they claim, has been permanently done away with. In other words, for authors such as Boettner, the use of the term "Jew" is really a hoax. He is quite frank in this regard, even though he continues to speak of "Jews" in the parlance of modern society. *We should point out further that those who today popularly are called "Jews" are in reality not Jews at all. Legitimate Judaism as it existed in the Old Testament era was of divine origin and had a very definite content of religious and civil laws, priesthood, ritual, sacrifices, temple, Sabbath, etc. But with the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the people in A.D. 70, that system was effectively destroyed. according to NT revelation their racial claim has no present or prospective divine validity. Rather, in a shadowy sense only, the Christian Church has inherited this past Jewish legacy including its terminology, so as to become the spiritual New Israel. As a result, every believer in Jesus as the Christ, of whatever nationality, is a spiritual Jew. Yet before Paul preaches to those who's idols provoked him (the Gentiles) we find him in Acts 17:17 preaching first to the Jews. Ref-0100, Tape 16:A. "Although the Scriptures are very clear about this procedure, it is nevertheless denied by many. A major argument used to refute this doctrine is based on Acts 28:25-28. Because of these concluding words and Paul's declaration that the gospel will now go to the Gentiles, the passage is taken to mean that the gospel is no longer to the Jew first and that God has now changed His program of evangelism, superseding Romans 1:16, which was written before the Book of Acts. . . . The true meaning is to be found by comparing this passage with two other passages where these words had been spoken before: Acts 13:44-48 and Acts 18:5-6. The true interpretation of Acts 28:25-28 is to be seen in these two passages, which indicate a local change and not an overall change in the program of evangelism. . . . There is no shift in the procedure of presenting the gospel. Acts 28 is only a continuation of a procedure already in progress of presenting the gospel to the Jews first and then turning to the Gentiles." Arnold Fruchtenbaum, Ref-1217, pp. 103-104. "During the nineteenth century, Great Britain witnessed not only widespread evangelistic and missionary outreach through the agency of Anglican and nonconformist Christianity, but also an intensity of biblical ministry that focused on outreach to the Jews with parallel eschatological concern. Consider the formation of the Church Missionary Society (1799, Anglican), the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews (1809, Anglican), the Free Church of Scotland Jewish Mission, (1840, Presbyterian), and the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel amongst the Jews (1842, non-denominational)." Ref-1263, p. 122 "... the modern Augustinian speaks of these converted Jews in an individual, token sense, but disallows historic Jewish corporate identity. He also believes that the non-Christian Jew has in fact no real Jewishness, even in a carnal sense. Privately, he believes that God has abandoned Judaism so as never again to revive it. He is convinced that the contemporary Jew is deceived, being a racial anachronism, though for witnessing purposes, and in a strictly secular or social level, he ought to be addressed as a "Jew.""

Ref-1263, p. 316 “. . . is our witness to unsaved loved ones strictly in the realm of literature distribution, conversation about the Bible, and invitations to hear the gospel preached? Surely not! There is also enjoyable social intercourse, sharing on a host of topics, genuine interest when family difficulties arise, and a readiness to offer practical help whenever trouble looms on the horizon. Then now is it that some convey the idea that to help the Jew is simply to expose him to the gospel, but any other more secular assistance is to be discarded as carnal, even inappropriate Zionism?” Ref-1263, p. 319

For eighteen hundred years the Jews have continued a separate people, without a king, without a land, without a territory, but never lost, never absorbed among other nations. They have been often trampled under foot, but never shaken from the faith of their fathers. They have been often persecuted but never destroyed. At this very moment they are as distinct and peculiar a people as any people upon earth, an unanswerable argument in the way of the infidel, a puzzling difficulty in the way of politicians, a standing lesson to all the world. Romans, Danes, Saxons, Normans, Belgians, French and Germans have all in turn settled on English soil. All have in turn lost their national distinctiveness. All have in turn become part and parcel of the English nation, after the lapse of a few hundred years. But it has never been so with the Jews. Dispersed as they are, there is a principle of cohesion among them which no circumstances have been able to melt. Scattered as they are, there is a national vitality among them which is stronger than that of any nation on earth. Go where you will, you will always find them. Settle where you please, in hot countries or in cold, you will find the Jews. But go where you will, and settle where you please, this wonderful people is always the same. Jews are always the Jews. Three thousand years ago Balaam said, "The people shall dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the nations." Eighteen hundred years ago our Lord said, "This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." We see these words made good before our eyes (Num. 23:9; Luke 21:32)." J. C. Jihad - vs. Israel's wars : ☩ + "To repeat, Yahweh did not order the Israelites to exterminate all Gentiles but only the Canaanites." This geographical limitation is to be distinguished from the expansionistic teachings of Islam. Its universally applicable holy war dictums exhibit a "manifest destiny" mentality that caused the Islamic religion to spread far beyond Arabia. Third, divinely sanctioned genocide was to be imposed not only upon the Canaanites but also upon Israelite cities and individual Israelites if they became involved in idolatry (Deut 13). Thus, genocide cannot be framed in terms of a racist issue since God ordered for it to be imposed upon both Canaanites and Israelites. . . . This command is a one-time command given to a specific people in a specific historical context and is not an open-ended command for all to follow. Thus, biblical genocide is distinct from genocide taught in the Islamic tradition, which contains genocidal commands the Islamic fundamentalists are to impose even to this day. For example, Sura 9:5 of the Qur'an says, "And when the sacred months are past, kill those who join other gods with God wherever ye shall find them; and seize them, besiege them, and lay wait for them with every kind of ambush; but if they shall convert, and observe prayer, and pay the obligatory alms, then let them go their way, for God is gracious, merciful." Thus, it would seem that when Christians commit genocide they are violating their holy book and when Islamic fundamentalists commit genocide they are following their holy book." Johannine Comma : 1Jn. 5:7 ☪ "[Manuscript 61] consists of the entire New Testament, dating from the late fifteenth or early sixteenth century. It was the first manuscript found containing 1 John 5:7, the single basis by which Erasmus was compelled to insert that doubtful passage into his Greek New Testament in 1516." Ref-0075, p. 403. ". . . this passage is a late intruder; it has no title to be considered part of the New Testament or to be recognized as canonical." Ref-0073, p. 288. "The first and second editions of Erasmus' Greek text did not contain the Comma. It is generally reported that Erasmus promised to include the Comma in his third edition if a single manuscript containing the Comma could be produced. A Franciscan friar named Froy (or Roy) forged a Greek text containing it by translating the Comma from the Latin to the Greek. Erasmus was then presented with this falsified manuscript and, being faithful to his word, reluctantly included the Comma in the 1522 edition. However, as has now been admitted by Dr. Bruce Metzger, this story is apocryphal (The Text of the New Testament, 291). Metzger notes that J. J. de Jonge, a respected specialist on Erasmus, has established that there is no evidence of such events occurring. Therefore, opponents of the Comma in light of the historical facts should no longer affirm this report." Ref-0086, p. 163. "Although some doubt if the Comma was a part of Jerome's original Vulgate, the evidence suggests that it was. Jerome states: 'In that place particularly where we read about the unity of the Trinity which is placed in the First Epistle of John, in which also the names of three, i.e., of water, of blood, and of spirit, do they place in their edition and omitting the testimony of the Father; and the Word, and the

Spirit in which the catholic faith is especially confirmed and the single substance of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit is confirmed.' Other church fathers are also known to have quoted the Comma. Although some have questioned if Cyprian (258 AD) knew of the Comma, his citation certainly suggests that he did. He writes: The Lord says, 'I and the Father are one' and likewise it is written of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 'And these three are one'.[35] Also, there is no doubt that Priscillian (385 AD) cites the Comma: As John says 'and there are three which give testimony on earth, the water, the flesh, the blood, and these three are in one, and there are three which give testimony in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, and these three are one in Christ Jesus. [36] Likewise, the anti-Arian work compiled by an unknown writer, the Varimadum (380 AD) states: And John the Evangelist says, . . . 'And there are three who give testimony in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, and these three are one'.[37] Additionally, Cassian (435 AD), Cassiodorus (580 AD), and a host of other African and Western bishops in subsequent centuries have cited the Comma.[38] Therefore, we see that the reading has massive and ancient textual support apart from the Greek witnesses." Ref-0086, pp. 166-168. "The first undisputed citations of the Johannine comma occur in the writing of two 4th-century Spanish bishops. . . In the 5th century the Johannine comma was quoted by several orthodox African writers to defend the doctrine of the Trinity against the gainsaying of the Vandals, who. . . were fanatically attached to the Arian heresy. . . Evidence for the early existence of the Johannine comma is found in the Latin version and in the writings of the Latin Church Fathers." Ref-0094, p. 2 quoting Edward F. Hills, The King James Version Defended, pp. 209-10 "The internal evidence against this excision [of the comma], then, is in the following points: ?First, if it be made, the masculine article, numeral, and particle. . . are made to agree directly with three neuters -- an insuperable and very bald grammatical difficulty. But if the disputed words are allowed to stand, they agree directly with two masculines and one neuter noun. . . where, according to a well known rule of syntax, the masculines among the group control the gender over a neuter connected with them. . . Second, if the excision is made, the eighth verse coming next to the sixth, gives us a very bald and awkward, and apparently meaningless, repetition of the Spirit's witness twice in immediate succession. Third, if the excision is made, then the proposition at the end of the eighth verse, [and these three agree in one], contains an unintelligible reference. . . And these three agree to that (aforesaid) One.. . . What is that aforesaid unity to which these three agree? If the seventh verse is excised, there is none. . . Let the seventh verse stand, and all is clear: the three earthly witnesses testify to that aforementioned unity which the Father, Word, and Spirit constitute." G.W. Anderson and D.E. Anderson, Why 1 John 5:7-8 is in The Bible, Ref-0094, p. 2 quoting R. L. Dabney, Discussions of Robert Lewis Dabney, biographical sketch by B.B. Warfield, 378 ". . . consider the internal evidence. 'In the first place, how did the Johannine comma originate if it be not genuine, and how did it come to be interpolated into the Latin New testament text? . . . Why does it not contain the usual trinitarian formula, namely, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit? Why does it exhibit the singular combination, never met with elsewhere, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit? . . . In the third place, the omission of the Johannine comma involves a grammatical difficulty. The words spirit, water, and blood are neuter in gender, but in 1 John 5:8 they are treated as masculine. If the Johannine comma is rejected, it is hard to explain this irregularity." John - author of John's Gospel : John 1:1 ☺

 "The first known writer to call the evangelist [of the fourth gospel] John is Theophilus, bishop of Antioch c A.D. 180 (To Autolytus, 2.22) See more generally M.F. Wiles, The Spiritual Gospel (Cambridge, 1960)." Ref-0073, p. 129. "Irenaeus is the first to say clearly (c. A.D. 180) that John the apostle wrote this gospel and that it was published by John at Ephesus, where he resided. Other late second-century evidence testifies to John the apostle's residence in Ephesus late in the first century. But Irenaeus's testimony is especially important; he was a disciple of Polycarp, and Polycarp had known the apostle John personally. Here then is a direct line between Irenaeus and John with only one connecting link -- Polycarp." Ref-0091, p. 290. ". . . we find in several second-century writers observations on its authorship. In the last quarter of a century Irenaeus, who had connections with both Asia Minor and Gaul, Clement of Alexandria, Theophilus of Antioch, Tertullian of Carthage, and the Gnostic Heracleon in Italy, the earliest known commentator on the fourth Gospel, attest the generally held belief that the author was John. Of these witnesses the most important is Irenaeus. 'John, the disciple of the Lord', he says, 'the same who reclined upon His breast, himself also published His Gospel, when he was living in Ephesus in Asia.' . . . Other evidence about the authorship of the Gospel is found towards the end of the second century in the Muratorian Fragment and in the anti-Marcionite prologue to the fourth Gospel. The former document tells this strange story: 'John one of the disciples wrote the fourth of the gospels. When his fellow-disciples and bishops urged him, he said: "Fast along with me for three days, and then let us relate to one another what shall be revealed to each." the same night it was revealed to Andrew, one of his apostles, that John should write everything down in his own name, and that should all revise it.' Andrew was certainly not alive at the time referred to. But the fragment may preserve a true tradition that several persons were concerned in the production of the Gospel, for we think of the men who append their testimonial to the evangelist's record in John 21:24: 'we know that his witness is true.' The other document, the anti-Marcionite prologue, which is much more important, runs as follows: 'The gospel of John was published and given to the churches by John when he was still in the body, as a man of Hierapolis, Papias by name, John's dear disciple, has related in his five Exegetical books. He indeed wrote down the gospel correctly at John's dictation. But the heretic Marcion was thrust out by John, after being repudiated by him for his contrary sentiments. He had carried writings or letters to him from brethren who were in Pontus.' . . . the prologue contains the important evidence that Papias in his Exposition of the Oracles of the Lord (c. A.D. 130-140) stated that John dictated the fourth Gospel. This is therefore our earliest external evidence for Johannine authorship of the Gospel. The statement that it was Papias who wrote down the Gospel at John's dictation is unsupported and in any case improbable." Ref-0239, pp. 48-50.

John - commentaries : John 1:1 ☺ + "I said in my first post in this series that I am not primarily interested in writing commentary lists for would-be scholars. The audience I have in mind are pastors and Bible teachers who are concerned about what these books mean and how their meaning can be brought to bear on contemporary living. The question I am concerned to answer is, "How will these people be most helped?" For this reason some will not agree with my recommendations. Most Christians cannot afford to purchase more than a few commentaries upon any book of Scripture they wish to study. Therefore, an expensive commentary, while desirable, would need to be essential, in the true sense of the word, to make it high on my list. I should also say that the lists will be colored somewhat (though not too much) by my premillennial and "Sovereignist" theology (I believe God's sovereign decision is always prior to man's decision, but I am not a Dortian Calvinist). The numbering is fairly subjective, but if a book makes the list it is recommended. As stated previously, commentaries are mostly identified by author and series: The Best Commentaries on John's Gospel: 1. Leon Morris ? NICNT The best work on this Gospel. His decisions are well based and theologically rounded-off, with lots to think upon. 2. Andreas Kostenberger ? BECNT A recent addition which shows great familiarity with recent discussions but presented in a remarkably pithy style. 3. R.C.H. Lenski Marvelously full-orbed work, always with Divine inspiration in mind. A model of commentary writing. Huge, yet never a waste of time. Some Lutheran blemishes, but a mine for preachers. 4. D.A. Carson ? Pillar Carson has the knack of sounding sensible all the time. A better format would really help this book. 5. H.N. Ridderbos Self-styled "Theological Commentary," but a fine exposition. Communicates the 'weight' of the text, though not enough on the Prologue. 6. William Hendriksen ? NT Commentary A preacher's commentary. It is a proclamation. Rigidly Reformed. Sometimes overly so, but edifying. 7. Frederic Godet Goes his own way at times, but always backed by exegesis and theology. A fruitful thinker. 8. Brooke Foss Westcott Famous 19th century classic. Conservative while painstaking. A little difficult to use. 9.

John Calvin Calvin is always worth consulting. 10. F.F. Bruce Short, clear, terse comments which invariably aid the reader, even if he has already read larger works. Other noteworthy works are those by Milne (edged out by Bruce), Laney (a little thin), Keener (too crammed) and Barrett (great exegesis but liberal). One would also be helped by Blomberg's The Historical Reliability of John's Gospel. Though not essential I would rate Matthew Henry high in the Gospels, and George Hutcheson's work devout and solid. Beasley-Murray (WBC) and Lincoln (BNTC) would be good if they could be trusted not to stray into liberal territory quite frequently." John the Baptist - doubt : Mtt. 11:1-15 ☉ "The nation's unbelief is foreshadowed by the unbelief exhibited by John the Baptist (Mtt. 11:1-15). If Christ's own forerunner was unsure of Christ's presentation of the kingdom, then what hope would there be for the nation's apostate religious leaders? While John had no doubts about Christ's messiahship (Mtt. 3:17; Luke 1:41; John 1:29,31), his real question was where was the kingdom if he as the king's forerunner was in prison? John had the common Jewish understanding that the advent of the king would be concurrent with the manifestation of the kingdom." His name was probably common in that family (cf. Acts 4:6; contrast Luke 1:61). St. John himself tells us of his close relationship to the high priest: On account of this he was able, on an extremely sensitive occasion, to gain access into the high priest's Court, using his influence with the guard to achieve entry for St. Peter as well (John 18:15-16)." joke - rabbi - circumcised car : ☉ + A rabbi and a Roman Catholic priest both minister in the same town for many years. Priest decides to anonymously bless Rabbi. When rabbi supposedly on trip, priest goes to house and washes rabbi's car. Rabbi turns out to be home and, from second story curtain, sees priest splashing water on his car. Few days later, rabbi pulls up in front of the priest's house. Priest sees rabbi get out of car with hacksaw, walk around behind priest's car and cut a few inches off other tail pipe. Priest runs out to ask what rabbi is doing? Rabbi explains he saw priest baptize his car and now he has come to circumcize the priest's car!

sent from Israel was Jonah. Gentiles would yet hear the message concerning the Messiah of Israel." Ref-0143, p. 166. "It is a sign that would come to Israel on three occasions: first, at the resurrection of Lazarus; second, at Jesus' own resurrection; and third, at the resurrection of the Two Witnesses in the Tribulation. The first two were rejected. The third will be accepted, for the resurrection of the Two Witnesses will lead to the salvation of the Jews of Jerusalem. . . . The second sign of Jonah was rejected in the first seven chapters of the Book of Acts. The stoning of Stephen in Acts seven by the Sanhedrin marked the official rejection of the second sign of Jonah." Ref-0219, pp. 301, 306. "While Christ's crucifixion officially ratified the Jewish nation's rejection of Christ, the resurrection would prove their decision wrong by authenticating Christ's messianic claims. Christ analogizes this sign to the sign of Jonah (Mtt. 12:38-40). Matthew is interested in the analogy to Jonah since he was a prophet who led a successful revival in a Gentile land (Mtt. 12:41). This analogy fits Matthew's theme of highlighting Gentile sensitivity against the backdrop of Jewish hardness in order to help His audience comprehend Gentile preeminence in God's interim program." (2) The sun/moon/stars have a direct corollary in Joseph’s dream (Gen. 37:9). Sun = Joseph’s Father (Jacob), moon = Jacob’s mother, 11 stars = brothers (12 stars meaning all twelve tribes). Hence a strong reference to Israel. (3) The reference to ‘clothed with the sun’ and ‘the moon under her feet’ refer to many passages which declare that the promises made to Israel (especially for a Davidic ruler and the continuation of the nation) can be thwarted only if the sun and moon can be made to cease from before God (Ps. 89:35-37; Jer. 31:36). Hence the reference is to the permanence of Israel and its promises in the mind of God as evidenced by His oaths involving the sun and moon. (4) The woman travails to give birth to the man-child (singular, male) who is caught-up. This would seem a clear allusion to the promise of the seed of the woman (Gen. 3:15) and the man-child is obviously Christ and not (the rapture of) the church." "Rachel died . . . giving birth to Benjamin . . . Leah, no doubt, raised Joseph and Benjamin . . . Clearly, [in Gen. 37:10] Jacob was referring to Leah." [Note that Jacob interprets the moon as representing Leah. A Midrash fragment explains: 'Hence [we know] that the Anointed of War will arise in the future from Joseph. . . . [And Rachel said:] God hath taken away [asaf] my reproach (ibid. v. 23) -- because it was prophesied to her that Messiah would arise from her' (BhM 6:81). . . . Scholars have repeatedly speculated about the origin of the Messiah ben Joseph legend and the curious fact that the Messiah figure has thus been split in two. It would seem that in the early legend, the death of the Messiah was envisaged, perhaps as a development of the Suffering Servant motif. A prophecy of Daniel, written about 164 B.C.E., is the earliest source speaking of the death of a Mashiah (?Anointed') sixty-two (prophetic) weeks after his coming and after the return and the rebuilding of Jerusalem (Dan. 9:24-26;?). While it appears that Daniel had a temporal ruler in mind, whom he calls Mashiah Nagid (?Anointed Prince'), some two centuries later, the author of 4 Ezra unmistakably refers to the Messiah, belief in whom had developed in the meantime, when he puts words in the mouth of God to the effect that after four hundred years (counted from when?), My son the Messiah shall die. . . ." In Jdg. 8:24 we read concerning the kings of Midian, Zebah, and Zalmunna, and their followers: 'For they had golden earrings, because they were Ishmaelites' Originally, to be sure, Midian was descended from Abraham by Keturah (Gen. 25:2), but the Ishmaelite tribes and Keturah tribes seem to have become intermingled in north Arabia because of their common descent from Abraham."

Josephus - background : ☪ + "Through his father Mattathias, Josephus was of the priestly nobility. He was related to the royal Hasmonean house through his mother. Originally named Joseph, he later called himself Flavius Josephus, Flavius being the name of the family of Roman emperors who were his patrons, and Josephus the romanized form of his Hebrew name. Between his birth and death (c. 37-100) Josephus was a student, sectarian, statesman, military officer, traitor, historian, and apologist for the Jews. . . . In the autumn of 67 the Romans arrived in Galilee. Josephus's efforts to stop their advance were futile. He and his forces made their last stand against the Romans at Jotapata. Because his soldiers preferred death with honor to surrender and servitude, Josephus proposed a plan of mass suicide. After all the others had killed themselves, however, Josephus and a companion surrendered to the Romans. When brought before Vespasian, Josephus predicted the general would one day become emperor. Josephus continued to be held as a captive. Roman military operations in Palestine were halted during 68-69 to await the outcome of the struggle for the throne following Nero's death. Eventually, Vespasian's army proclaimed him emperor. He liberated Josephus, who accompanied his benefactor as far as Alexandria and then returned to assist Vespasian's son Titus in the final siege of Jerusalem. Josephus acted as an interpreter and mediator between the combatant forces, was wounded, and witnessed the overthrow of the nation and city in 70. After the war Josephus was taken to Rome by Titus, who himself eventually succeeded to the imperial throne. Under Vespasian and Titus, Josephus lived as a ward of the court. Granted a stipend and a villa, he spent much of his time in writing." Ref-1200, pp. 35-36.

Jubilee - calendar : Sabbath - land - calendar of Sabbatical years☆

jubilee - cycle : Lev. 25:8-16; Lev. 25:23-55 ☪ + "The name Jubilee comes from the Hebrew word for trumpet, יובל (yovel), literally "ram's horn," the instrument which was blown to announce the occasion. In the book of Leviticus the statement about the Sabbatical year (Lev. 25:1-7) is followed immediately by a long statement about Jubilee (Lev. 25:8-16,23-55) . . . Here it seems plain that the forty-nine years were followed by a separate fiftieth year, which was the Jubilee year proper, and this was the more usual reckoning, but even among the rabbinic authorities there was disagreement and some considered that there were only forty-nine years in the program and the forty-ninth year was itself the Jubilee year. Furthermore, the book of Jubilees (about 160-150 B.C.), which takes its name from the institution, always makes the Jubilee consist of forty-nine years and uses the name for this entire unit of time. The name "Sabbath of Sabbaths" was also used and occurs in the War Scroll from Qumran (1QM 7.14) and the related Damascus Document (CD 16.4). In a discussion of the Sabbatical and Jubilee years in the tractate 'Arakin in the Babylonian Talmud, certain rabbis are quoted as holding "that the fiftieth year is not included," meaning not included in the cycle of seven years; but Rabbi Judah is cited as holding "that the fiftieth year counts both ways," meaning counted as both the Jubilee year and the year beginning the next seven-year cycle. Most authoritatively Maimonides states: It is a command to count seven seven-year periods and (then) to sanctify the fiftieth year (as a Jubilee year). . . . the Jubilee year is not included in the number of the seven-year periods; the forty-ninth year is Shemitah, the fiftieth year is Jubilee, and the fifty-first year is the beginning of the (new) seven-year periods." Ref-0840, p. 127.

jubilee - observation of : Lev. 25:10; Lev. 27:17-24 ☪ "There is uncertainty as to how regularly and how literally the Jubilee year was observed. According to one rabbinic source, the institution was abolished after the fall of Samaria (723 B.C.), since the words of Lev. 25:10 . . . require the Jubilee only when it can be proclaimed "throughout the land to all its inhabitants," which was no longer possible after the deportation of the people of Northern Israel, and most Talmudic authorities are said to grant that the Jubilee was not observed in the Jewish calendar after the Babylonian exile. On the other hand, the Sabbatical year and the Jubilee were so closely related in the book of Leviticus and in their significance that it is difficult to think that the latter would fall away all together. Also, the existence of the book of Jubilees (which probably dates in the original Hebrew from the second century B.C. and was found in Hebrew fragments in Cave 1 at Qumran) and the more recently published Melchizedek text from Qumran Cave 11 attest to the importance of the idea of Jubilee in that time." Ref-0840, p. 129. "Old Testament legislation had instituted the Year of Jubilee to maintain equitable division of land (Lev. 25:8-16; 27:17-24). Evidently this law was not observed in Intertestamental Judaism. More and more of the best land was progressively incorporated into royal estates or large aristocratic holdings. Consequently, less and less was available for the common person. When agricultural reversals and rising taxes forced the small farmer to borrow, interest could be quite high: lenders and tax collectors could be merciless in demanding payment. A growing number of peasants were driven from their land by forces beyond their control." Ref-1200, pp. 244-245.

"This Jubilee date of 1992 was obtained from the computation of the date of the first Jubilee, held 14 years after entrance of the Israelites into Canaan under Joshua in 1463 B.C. A Jubilee year has historically ended in either a 2 (Hebrew letter beth) or 52 (Hebrew letter nun beth), thus the current calendar date 5752 (1992, which actually began with the Jewish New Year, Rosh Ha-shanah, on September 9, 1991) is thought to be a Jubilee year." Judah - genealogical records required : Gen. 49:10 ☪ Messiah will have to come before the tribe of Judah loses its identity. This establishes a clear time period for the prophecy. The records by which tribal identities were maintained were kept in the Jewish Temple. All of these records were lost with the destruction of the temple in 70 A.D. Within a few generations all the tribes of Israel, with the exception of Levi, had lost their identity. Immediately after 70 A.D. the rabbis passed laws which would preserve the identity of the priestly tribe of Levi, but Jews from the other tribes quickly lost their identity. In order for this prophecy to have significance to humans (God still knows the tribal identities), Messiah had to come before 70 A.D. Ref-0011, p. 22.

Judaism - Christianity - rivalry : ☪ + "With Judaism engaged in a struggle for survival, and Christianity moving more and more into the milieu of Greco-Roman culture, it is hardly surprising that these two faiths increasing saw themselves as rivals. Thus at Jamnia, where Yohanan ben Zakkai had received permission from Rome to set up a school for rabbinical study, the rabbis developed puns to distort the meaning of the word euangelion ("gospel"). Moreover the Birkath ha-Minim, a pronouncement against heretics which is part of the twelfth "benediction" in the Jewish liturgical prayer "Eighteen Benedictions," is thought to be directed against Christians. There is evidence of this in Justin Martyr's Dialogue with Trypho, written about A.D. 150. Justin accuses the Jews of "cursing in [their] synagogues those that believe on Christ." . . . A particular area of rivalry between Christianity and Judaism concerned the Old Testament Scriptures. For their part, the Rabbis rejected the Christian interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures when these were used to demonstrate that Jesus was the Messiah of Israel. On the other hand, Christians freely appropriated to themselves much in the Hebrew Scriptures that was originally addressed to Israel. This was facilitated by the practice of allegorical interpretation." Ref-0685, pp. 70-71.

Thereafter, it had made its way around the Egyptian antiquities market, then to Geneva (where it was scientifically studied and authenticated by experts) and the U.S., and finally back to Switzerland where the Maecenas Foundation was finally willing to pay the high asking price. As with the Nag Hammadi Library, the text was written in Coptic and was dated to the fourth century AD. judges - 450 years : Jdg. 11:26; 1K. 6:1; Acts 13:19-20 ✪ "Concerning Paul's statement in Acts 13:19, I consider the UBS text to be preferable." David Down, Letters, Ref-0003 15(3) 2001, p. 49. "... a paradox is perceived between 1 Kings 6:1 ... and Acts 13:17-21. ... The patent fact gleaned from reading the narratives concerning the various judges is that the stories, men, and periods mentioned in Acts 13 overlap one another. Failure to see this leads one, as do many, to take the Acts

13:17-21 data, i.e., the 40 years in the wilderness, the "about" 450 years for Judges and 40 years for Saul's reign obtaining a subtotal of 530 years. They then add 40 years for David's reign and 3+ (or 4-) years for the beginning of Solomon's reign to the building of the Temple and obtain 573 (or some similar number by the same reasoning) as the total years ... for the period described in 1 Kings 6:1 as being only 480 years. ... However, rather than adding 40 + 450 + 40 = 530 years, the 40s were found to overlap the period of 450 and thus should be subtracted from the total. That is, in the Book of First Samuel, Samuel's life as a Judge overlaps Saul's reign until almost its end. ... Samuel died at least one year and four months before Saul was slain on Mount Gilboa, consequently Saul's 40 years should not be added as though they consecutively followed those of Samuel's Judgeship. As Samuel is the last Judge, most of Saul's years must be taken from the 450 year total. Further, as Moses is one of the Judges, his last 40 years are included in the "about 450 years" of Acts 13:20 as are the years of Joshua's Judgeship. When this is understood and drawn, the 480 years of 1 Kings 6:1 are verified, becoming a major chronological key." Ref-0186, pp. 74-75. "Hence, the 40 years etc., referred to in Acts 13:17-22 must overlap the "about" 450 years and be subtracted from it, not summed. The Gordian knot is cut by simply seeing that the "about" 450 is not referring to the length of the period of the Judges at all in Acts 13:17-22! Instead, it is either: (a) A parenthetical remark concerning the span of time of this whole thought from the Exodus in 1491 B.C. until 1048 B.C. when David became King of all 12 tribes (i.e., c.443 years); (b) The 400 years of affliction (vs. 17 cp. Gen. 15:13) by Egypt plus the 40 years in the wilderness (vs. 18) and the 7 years of war until the actual distribution of the land (vs. 19) totaling 447 years; (c) A parenthetical remark beginning when the covenant ritual with Abraham (initiated in Genesis 15; cp. "chose our fathers", Acts 13:17) was consummated in his 99th year (born B.C. 1996 - 99 = B.C. 1897) in Genesis 17 by the changing of his name from Abram and the seal of circumcision. The period ended in B.C. 1444 when the land was divided among the tribes (1897 - 1444 = 453 years). (c) is self explanatory and well may be the actual solution. ... the following quote from Ussher, written prior to A.D. 1658 ... succinctly embodies that which is stated in (b) as well as all that proceeded [sic] it: 'In the year after the Elections of the Fathers, much about 450 [Acts 13:17, 19-20] for from the birth of the promised seed Issac, to this time [i.e.: the division of the land in B.C. 1444 - as seen from his preceding paragraph. He gives 1896 as the birth year of Isaac on page 6], are reckoned 452 years: and from the rejection of Ishmael, 447 but between both, we may count, 450 years.' (author's brackets)." Ref-0186, pp. 77-78. "We therefore aver and asseverate that Jephthah knew the exact span and further declare that the 300 is a decisive component which has largely been dismissed by most chronologists, thereby compromising to a great extent the accuracy of their endeavors. By their rejection of Jephthah's statement as anything other than a general approximation, they fail to see that the time periods in the book of Judges can no longer be accurately calculated. ... Remember, the main reason this number has not been accepted is because if the chronological calculations are based on the 300 years of Judges 11:26, it will absolutely militate against the summation technique which is invariably applied when Acts 13:20 is taken as meaning the span from Cushan to Saul's enthronement. ... Jephthah's 300 confirms the subtracting technique." Ref-0186, pp. 89-90. "The long period of 480 years mentioned in 1Ki 6:1 has occasioned a considerable amount of perplexity. Some Chronologers, like Ussher, have adopted it into their chronological system and thereby vitiated their entire scheme from that point onward to the extent of 114 years. Others, like Jackson, Hales and Clinton, regard it as "a forgery foisted into the Text," and reject it altogether. Others, again, have not only accepted the number 480 as authentic, and bent the Chronology of the Old Testament to make it accord with this figure, but they have even ventured upon the task of correcting St. Paul, and emended the Text of the New Testament in Ac 13:17-20 in order to bring it into accord with the 480 years of 1Ki 6:1. This "amended," or rather this corrupted Text, is the basis of the translation of Ac 13:17-20 in the Revised Version, a rendering which absolutely precludes the possibility of putting any intelligible construction on the words of Ac 13:19-20. The Authorised Version translates the true Text of sTi. D2, E, H, L, P, and many others, item D*d., syr., ar., aeth., "when He had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, He divided their land to them by lot. And after that He gave unto them Judges about the space of 450 years until Samuel the prophet." The Revised Version translates the "emended" Text of Gb1, ALEPH, A, B, C, and 7 cursives, which yields this nonsense, "when He had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, He gave them their land for an inheritance for about 450 years; and after these things He gave them Judges until Samuel the prophet." The great blot of the R.V. throughout the New Testament, is the overrating of the authority of Westcott and Hort's pet MSS. ALEPH and B., two MSS. regarded as amongst the earliest and best authorities by one school of Textual critics led by Westcott and Hort, but really two faulty copies carelessly made by Eusebius for the Emperor Constantine, containing numerous errors, and by no means worthy to be adopted as a standard Text, as is clearly proved by an opposing school of Textual critics led by Burgon and Scrivener. How could St. Paul have been guilty of perpetrating a sentence which limits the inheritance of the Land by the people of Israel to the time of Eli, and then placing the period of the 14 Judges between Eli and Samuel! Fortunately, the Authorised Version adheres to the better MS. authorities, and gives not only an intelligible but also a true rendering of Paul's great speech at Antioch in Pisidia. We will first prove (I) that the true extent of the period from the Exodus to the 4th year of Solomon is 594 years: (1) from the Text of the Old Testament, and (2) from the address of St. Paul at Antioch recorded in the New Testament (Ac 13:17-20). We will then explain (II) the nature of the mistake of Ussher, who is followed in this matter by Bishop Lloyd, in the dates given in the margin of the A.V., and finally we will explain (III) the real significance of the phrase "the 480th year," as used by the author of the Text, 1Ki 6:1, and the exact meaning which he intended to convey thereby." Ref-0896, chapter 19. See also Ref-0784, 22(3) 2008, pp. 56-57.

Justification is free whereas sanctification is costly. (Luke 14:25,33) 2. Justification is instantaneous (John 3:8). Sanctification is a life-long process (John 8:31). 3. Justification is by faith (Eph. 2:8). Sanctification is by faithfulness (1Cor. 4:2). 4. Justification is not of works (Eph. 2:9). Sanctification is of works (Eph. 2:10). 5. Justification involves Christ's love for me (John 3:16). Sanctification involves my love for Christ (1Jn. 4:19) 6. Justification concerns Christ's righteousness (2Cor. 5:21). Sanctification concerns my righteousness. 7.

Justification involves my position in Christ. Sanctification involves Christ's position in me. 8. Justification considers what God has done. Sanctification considers what I am doing. 9. Justification is God's commitment to me. Sanctification is my commitment to God. 10. Justification requires obedience to one command (faith in Christ, Acts 6:7). Sanctification requires obedience to all the Lord's commands. 11. Justification focuses on the cross which Jesus took up once and for all (1Cor. 1:18). Sanctification focuses on the cross which I am to pick up daily (Luke 9:53). 12. Justification is finished at the moment of faith (John 5:24). Sanctification is not finished until I go to be with the Lord (1Cor. 9:24,27). Mike Gendron, Roman Catholicism (GB-310), Tape 7:A, Tyndale Theological Seminary <http://www.tyndale.edu>

He hath borne the yoke of our iniquities, and our transgression, and is wounded because of our transgression. He beareth our sins on his shoulder, that he may find pardon for our iniquities. We shall be healed by his wound, at the time that the Eternal will create him (the Messiah) as a new creature. O bring him up from the circle of the earth. If this course of action seems unduly harsh, its justification may be found in the unspeakably degraded practices which are described in horrible detail in the 18th chapter of Leviticus, a chapter to be read and pondered by those who are troubled with the alleged 'moral' problem in relation to the character of God. There was indeed a moral problem in the land of Palestine, and it seemed to require what might be called a 'surgical operation' on the human race for the sake of its own preservation. And if the nation of Israel was made the divinely chosen instrument in the operation, it should not be forgotten that the same nation was thus preserved from fatal contamination in order to fulfil her destiny as the channel of divine salvation on behalf of all nations. . . . The early so-called 'wars' of Israel, in taking over the promised land, were not wars at all in the ordinary sense of that term. Rather they were divinely ordered executions in which the armies of Israel served only as an instrument. king - divine right - King James : ☪ + "The ultimate grounds for James's hostility toward the Geneva Bible was the challenge its marginal notes posed to his passionate belief in the doctrine of the "divine rights of kings." While the ultimate origins of the theory of divine right of kings can be traced back to the mists of the early Middle Ages, it has received a new sense of direction under James I. While still James VI of Scotland, James had written some owrks that showed a keen interest in the divine validation of royal authority, subject to certain limitations. These ideas were set out especially in his True Law of Free Monarchies (1598), but can be summarized neatly in the opening sonnet of his Basilikon Doron (also 1598): | God gives not Kings the style of Gods in vain, | For on his throne his Sceptre do they sway; | And as their subjects ought them to obey, | So Kings should fear and serve their God again." Ref-0686, p. 141.

King - James - Ex. 1:19 : Ex. 1:19 ☪ "[King] James was particularly exercised by the Geneva note at Exodus 1:19. It was an all-important passage, in his view, for understanding the nature of royal authority and the relationship between royal and divine instructions. . . . The modern reaction would surely be to admire the midwives' courage in standing up to the Pharaoh . . . Their disobedience was brave and their deception clever. But the Genevan note ran as follows: "Their disobedience in this was lawful, but their deception is evil." For James, their behavior had been the essence of sedition. Their disobedience was wicked and their deception made it worse. It was clearly the midwives' duty to obey the royal instruction, to conform to the authority of the powers that be and to murder the babies." " Ref-0235, pp. 58-59.

King - James - homosexual tendencies : ☪ + "Further concerns were expressed over the king's increasingly obvious homosexual tendencies, which led to certain royal favorites being granted favors that were the subject of much comment and envy. Robert Carr, some twenty years younger than James, was one such favorite: he became the earl of Somerset in 1613. Although James fondled and kissed his favorites in what was widely regarded as a lecherous manner in public, the court was prepared to believe that his private behavior was somewhat more restrained." Ref-0686, p. 171.

King - James - lineage : ☪ + "In one sense, James was the obvious choice to succeed Elizabeth. None of the children of Henry VIII had produced children; it was, therefore, necessary to seek the heir to the English throne from the descendants of Henry VIII's father, Henry VII. As the senior living descendant of Henry VII, James was strategically placed for the succession. Henry VII's elder daughter, Margaret Tudor, had married James IV of Scotland, and James VI was descended from this line through his mother, Mary Queen of Scots." Ref-0686, p. 136.

King - James - Presbyterianism - opposed : ☪ + "James disliked Presbyterianism, believing passionately that his royal authority was dependent upon bishops. "No bishops, no king" summarized admirably his view of the interrelationship of church and state. It is true that the Scottish church (or "kirk") had adopted the Presbyterian system of church government, developed by Calvin at Geneva, under reformers such as John Knox and Andrew Melville. Yet whatever his public obligations may have been to support this system, in private James VI had serious misgivings about Presbyterianism, which had no place for any bishops. He lobbied for the retention of episcopal government of the Scottish church. James believed that Presbyterianism was linked with egalitarianism and republicanism -- after all, had not the city of Geneva declared itself to be a republic after overthrowing its former rulers? He preferred an episcopal system, not least because of its more positive associations with the monarchy. His views on this matter were shaped to no small extent by some unpleasant experiences with Scottish presbyteries, particularly under Andrew Melville, a Scottish presbyterian who had taught at the Genevan Academy, and formed a close personal friendship with Calvin's protege, Theodore Beza. At a heated encounter between the king and senior churchmen at Falkland Palace in October 1596, Melville had physically taken hold of James and accused him of being "God's silly vassal." Melville pointedly declared that while they would support James as king in public, in private they all knew perfectly well that Christ was the true king in Scotland, and his kingdom was the kirk -- a kingdom in which James was a mere member, no a lord or head. James was shaken by this physical and verbal assault, not least because it suggested that Melville and his allies posed a significant threat to the Scottish throne." Ref-0686, pp. 139-140.

kingdom - church not : ☪ "It is difficult to conceive how the idea of the identity of the Kingdom of God with the Church could have originated." Ref-0021, p. 1:269. "The identification of the Kingdom with the Church has led historically to ecclesiastical policies and programs which, even when not positively evil, have been far removed from the original simplicity of the New Testament ekklesia. It is easy to claim that in the 'present kingdom of grace' the rule of the saints is wholly 'spiritual,' exerted only through moral principles and influence. But practically, once the Church becomes the Kingdom in any realistic theological sense, it is impossible to draw any clear line between principles and their implementation through political and social devices. For the logical implications of a present ecclesiastical kingdom are unmistakable, and historically have always led in only one direction, i.e., political control of the state by the Church. The distances down this road travelled by various religious movements, and the forms of control which were developed, have been widely different. The difference is very great between the Roman Catholic system and modern Protestant efforts to control the state; also between the ecclesiastical rule of Calvin in Geneva and the fanaticism of Munster and the English 'fifth-monarchy.' But the basic assumption is always the same: The Church in some sense is the Kingdom, and therefore has a divine right to rule; or it is the business of the Church to 'establish' fully the Kingdom of God among men. Thus the Church loses its 'pilgrim' character and the sharp edge of its divinely commissioned 'witness' is blunted. It becomes an ekklesia which is not only in the world, but also of the world. It forgets that just as in the regeneration of the individual soul only God can effect the miracle, even so the 'regeneration' of the world can only be wrought by the intrusion of regal power from on high (Mtt. 19:28)." Ref-0183, pp. 438-439. "Here are five thoughts: (1) the Church is not the Kingdom; (2) the Kingdom of God incorporates the Church; (3) the Church witnesses to the Kingdom of God; (4) the Church is the instrument of the Kingdom, and (5) the Church is the custodian of the Kingdom during this time." The first crisis came in the ministry of Isaiah when the rebellion of the nation was leading inexorably to the judgment of captivity and dispersion in which the Theocratic Kingdom on earth would end (Isa. 6:9-10). The second crisis came during the ministry of Christ when the attitude of Israel had made clear that He would be rejected by the nation (Mtt. 13:13-15). The third crisis came when, following the official offer of the King in His triumphal entry, the nation's leaders prepared to kill Him (John 12:37-41). The fourth crisis came when the unyielding opposition of the nation toward a renewed offer of her Messianic King, now risen from the dead, had run its bitter course from Jerusalem to Rome [Acts 28:25-27]. Thus, it is our duty to vote the right ticket politically, give to the Red Cross, help the Boy Scouts, support the United Nations, endow hospitals, etc. But if a 'spiritual' kingdom can and should produce such effects at the present time through the very imperfect agency of sinful men, why cannot the same thing be true in larger measure in the coming age when the rule of God will be mediated more perfectly and powerfully through the Eternal Son personally present among men as the Mediatorial King? . . . The reasoning of such men at times seems very curious. If physicians conquer disease, if scientists eliminate certain physical hazards, if by legislation governments improve the quality of human existence, if wise statesmen succeed in preventing a war, etc., -- these things are often cited as evidence of the progress of a present Kingdom of God. But if the Lord Jesus Christ Himself returns to earth in person to accomplish these same things, more perfectly and universally, then we are told that such a kingdom would be 'carnal.'" James (Jas 2:5) and Peter both concur (2 Pet 1:11) with Paul that they had not yet entered that kingdom -- a kingdom whose coming John describes in Revelation 12:10." William D. Barrick, "New Covenant Theology and the Old Testament Covenants", Ref-0164, Volume 18 Number 2 Fall 2007, 165:180, p. 179. An indicator that the Davidic kingdom is not presently underway is the "Times of the Gentiles" -- a period of time during which Israel lacks any ruler on the Davidic throne. This period began with the Babylonian Captivity (see Eze. 21:10-27) and continues with the rejection of Jesus as King of the Jews (Luke 21:24). Since the "Times of the Gentiles" are still underway, we know that there is no king presently on the Davidic throne. "Note the difference between Luke 17:21 and Luke 21:31: 1) Luke 17:20-21--Jesus says not to look for signs concerning the kingdom; 2) Luke 21:31--Jesus says to look for signs concerning the kingdom. The best way to harmonize these two passages is to understand that Jesus' bodily presence carries with it a presence of the kingdom, but when He is gone from the earth, the kingdom is not present. At the time of Luke 17:20-21 Jesus was bodily present, thus there was no need to look for signs of the kingdom. The kingdom was present in His person. But when He is bodily absent from earth one can look for signs of His return and the coming of the kingdom of God (Luke 21:31)." Furthermore, He is ruling this Kingdom from the Throne of God the Father and [not] the Throne of David. Finally, the Messianic Kingdom was no mystery; most of what is known about the Messianic Kingdom is revealed in the Old Testament. Fifth, it is not the same as the Church. When Jesus said that "many prophets and righteous men desired to see what you see, and did not see it, and to hear what you hear, and did not hear it" (v. 17), He indicated that the Old Testament prophets were not recipients of the truths He was revealing to His disciples at that time. What Jesus was describing in the parables the Old Testament prophets would like to have seen and heard, but they had not and could not. Paul described "mystery" in the same sense . . . (Eph. 3:5)." kingdom - offer - AGAINST : Mtt. 8:5-13; John 4:39-43 ☼ "If our Lord ministered only to Jews up to Matthew 12, then why is the episode of his conversation with the Roman centurion (non-Jew) placed in Mtt. 8:5-13? Even our Lord's encounter with the Samaritan woman in John 4:39-43 fits chronologically in this time-frame of the early Judean ministry of our Lord." Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., "Kingdom Promises as Spiritual and National," Ref-0199, p. 305.

kingdom - offer - at hand yet future : Mark 1:15; Luke 19:11 ☼ "We have here a key to one of the most puzzling problems of New Testament eschatology in relation to the Kingdom: How could the Kingdom be 'at hand,' and yet not near at hand? (Mark 1:15 WITH IJUE 19:11). The true answer is to be found in the word 'contingency.' The very first announcement of the Kingdom as 'at hand' had called upon the nation of Israel to make a decision (Mark 1:15), a genuine decision, a moral and spiritual decision; and they made it, tragically, the wrong way. . . Those who fail to see this can make nothing out of certain portions of our Lord's prophetic teaching. There still remains the philosophical problem of course, but this is nothing new; it being only an aspect of the wider problem of Divine Sovereignty and Moral Responsibility. And for this there is no completely rational solution which does not end by affirming one and denying the other. But the Word of God teaches the reality of both." Ref-0183, p. 320.

kingdom - offer - sovereignty vs. responsibility : Mark 14:21; Luke 22:22 ☼

"the words of Christ regarding Judas raise the theological problem of divine sovereignty versus human responsibility in relation to the Kingdom . . . [Luke 22:22]. The rejection of the regal 'Son of man' and His Kingdom was no chance incident in the history of the world, for this matter was part of the counsels of the Eternal One. On the other hand, what Judas did in conspiracy with the leaders of Israel was something which morally the conspirators ought not to have done, and for which therefore they will be held personally responsible before the bar of God. Our Lord's terrible words . . . [Mark 14:21], underline this responsibility. But if the moral responsibility for rejecting the Messiah and His Kingdom was genuine, then so also the divine offer must have been genuine." Ref-0183, p. 373.

kingdom - offered - literal : Mtt. 3:2; Mtt. 4:17; Mtt. 10:7; Mtt. 20:20-21; Acts 1:6-7 ☼ "John has in mind the eschatological, earthly kingdom as anticipated by the Old Testament prophets. This is event for several reasons. First, the simple fact that John and Christ made no explanation of the kingdom is a clear indication of this fact. If the concept had been a different one, John and the Lord would have pointed it out. But neither John, Jesus, nor the twelve disciples make any such explanation when they preach the nearness of the kingdom. A second cogent reason is seen in the restriction of the message to the Jewish nation (Matthew 10:5-6). If the message involved a spiritual kingdom only, why limit it to Israel? This message was preached to the Jews exclusively because the coming of the kingdom prophesied in the Old Testament was contingent upon the reception of it by the nation of Israel. A third reason for believing John refers to the Millennial Kingdom is found in the disciples' anticipation of a literal kingdom (Matthew 20:20-21; Acts 1:6). The request of Matthew 20:20-21 could be explained as a mistaken notion if it were made early in the disciples' career. However, this request is made after they had heard the doctrine of the kingdom as taught by the Lord for many months. . . A fourth reason is based on simple logic. The kingdom in view cannot refer to the church since the church was not yet revealed. It cannot be God's universal kingdom because it is an eternal kingdom always present. Some contend that the kingdom in view is a spiritual one in which God rules in men's hearts. McClain presents a very forcible argument in opposition of this view. [We may also add that if the Kingdom, announced as 'at hand' by the Lord, had been exclusively a 'spiritual kingdom,' . . . such an announcement would have had no special significance whatever to Israel, for such a rule of God had always been recognized among the people of God. Compare the psalmist's affirmation concerning the righteous, The law of his God is in his heart (Ps. 37:31). (McClain, The Greatness of the Kingdom, p. 303) The only conclusion at which one can arrive is that the proclamation of John refers to a literal, earthly kingdom in fulfillment of the Old Testament promises and prophecies.”

Ref-0143, pp. 61-61 “their final question on the subject [Acts 1:6-7] should not be dismissed lightly as evidence of an ‘unspiritual’ and ‘carnal’ viewpoint, as some writers assume to do. Such treatment imputes not only inferior intelligence to the apostles but also, worse than that, incompetence to their Teacher.” Ref-0183, p. 393. “Suppose that Jesus did offer a spiritual kingdom in the hearts of men, and that repentance was the condition for receiving that kingdom, and that the people did repent and were born again, what then would have happened to the cross? Since the crucifixion had not yet taken place, does it mean that there was in those days a way of salvation different from salvation through the death of Christ?” Ref-0056, pp. 166-168. For an excellent discussion of kingdom offer, See Ref-0207, pp. 299-311. “As Beacham writes, “These parables were not spoken by Christ at the inception of His ministry in order to redefine the prophesied kingdom or to correct Jewish misconceptions about Messiah’s rule. Rather, the kingdom parables were spoken by Christ later in His ministry, at a point of crisis in the offer of the restored kingdom to Israel. . . . The kingdom parables, then, were not intended to define the kingdom in its offer but to explain the effects of its rejection. The contextual setting that envelopes the kingdom parables (Mtt. 10:11-16:21) must not be ignored in their interpretation.” Gary W. Derickson, “Matthew’s Chiastic Structure and Its Dispensational Implications”, Ref-0200 Volume 163 Number 652, October-December 2006, 423:437, p. 432. “Thus Jesus’ parables of the kingdom do not describe Messiah’s kingdom or the church. Instead they address God’s continued kingdom program (His universal rule) expressed through the church while Israel’s program is “put on hold” until Daniel’s seventieth week is resumed.” Gary W. Derickson, “Matthew’s Chiastic Structure and Its Dispensational Implications”, Ref-0200 Volume 163 Number 652, October-December 2006, 423:437, p. 437. “Three times before Matthew 12 the kingdom is said to be near (Mtt. 3:2; 4:17; 10:7). Then after Jesus’ opponents accused Him of casting out demons by the power of Satan (Mtt. 12:24-32; Mark 3:22-30; Luke 11:14-26), the nearness of the kingdom is never mentioned again the Gospels.” Stanley D. to deny that a spiritual kingdom can function tangibly in a world of sense experience. As a matter of fact, it would be wrong to say that the Kingdom of Old Testament prophecy is basically ‘spiritual,’ yet a Kingdom producing tangible effects in every area of human life.” Ref-0183, p. 221.

kingdom - upon or within : Mtt. 12:28; Luke 10:11; Luke 17:21 ☪ “There is . . . an ambiguity in the Luke passage which has caused. . . much difficulty. It involves the adverb εντος. While some say it means within, others say it is to be translated among. Of the two, among is by far the better. Major, Manson, and Wright give three reasons why this is so. First, the kingdom of God could not in any way be said to be within His foes, the Pharisees, whom He was then addressing. Second, the kingdom under discussion was not a spiritual one, but the earthly, Jewish, eschatological one. Finally, Jesus always speaks of men entering the kingdom and never of the kingdom entering into men. . . . The kingdom of the heavens had drawn near; its nearness was proven by the evidence of signs; and whether it should come or not was in the control of Israel.” Ref-0143, pp. 163-164. “The King James rendering of ‘within,’ cannot be true; for surely in no sense could the Kingdom of God have been ‘within’ the hearts of the Pharisees to whom our Lord was speaking, and who had charged blasphemously that His miracles were being accomplished through the power of the devil (Mtt. 12:24). But in the Person of its divinely appointed King, visibly present in incarnate form on earth where He must eventually reign, the Kingdom was in that sense already ‘in the midst of’ men regardless of their attitude, whether for or against Him.” Ref-0183, p. 272. For this sense, see Luke 10:9-11; 11:20; Mtt. 12:28; Mark 1:15. “The phrase ‘within you’ is susceptible of an easy and consistent solution: (Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, Proposition 110, Observation 2, p. 41). The kingdom is covenanted to the Jewish nation; it is an elect nation; the kingdom belonged so exclusively to them that the public ministry of John the Baptist, Jesus and the disciples, was confined to that nation. The kingdom was tendered to the Jewish nation; on its refusal (through its representative men) to repent, the kingdom is postponed, and those who are to receive it as an inheritance with Christ are grafted into that elect nation. These considerations show at once how this kingdom was ‘within’ them. It was truly ‘within’ the nation, it being the elect nation.” (Peters, Theocratic Kingdom, vol. 2, pp. 41-42).

In other cases, He dealt with the reign of God in the heart, or a spiritual kingdom. On yet other occasions He spoke specifically of the kingdom promise to David.” Ref-0104, p. 134. “. . . Jesus taught that His Kingdom is something new and distinctive (Mark 1:15); that it is moral and spiritual, and not political (Mtt. 5:3-12; Luke 6:20-23; John 18:36); that it is invisible and internal (Luke 17:20-21); that it is silent, mysterious, and progressive (Mark 4:26-29); that it is universal in its design and scope (Mtt. 21:31,43); that it is social (Mtt. 20:25-28); that by it we enter into a relation, not only to God, but also to men; that it can be entered only by regeneration (John 3:3,5; Mtt. 18:3-4); and that it is both present and future (Mtt. 12:28; Mark 9:1; Luke 13:29; Luke 17:21).” Ref-0117, p. 565. “The kingdom has both a future and a present form. The future form is the Millennial Kingdom spoken of so frequently in prophecy. The present form is the Spiritual Kingdom where God rules in the hearts of saved men today. Jesus has in mind this spiritual kingdom when He tells Nicodemus, ‘Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God’ (John 3:3; also Mtt. 6:33, Gal. 5:21 and other passages) In addition, there is the Eternal Kingdom of God which comprehends the rule of God over all creation -- saved and unsaved -- down the ages.” Ref-0207, p. 184n1.

kings - book of - authorship : 1K. 1:1; 2K. 1:1 ☪ “Distinctly religious history was recorded in the Book of Kings. Such history could have been written only by religious men. In Israel and Judah, as in other nations, there were official court reporters who kept formal records of state. But the more closely we examine the accounts in Kings, the more clear it is that the royal scribes had little if anything to do with most of this material as it has come down to us. There is in these books too much of severe indictment of the wicked ways of individual kings, too much pronouncement of divine doom on the heads of recalcitrant rulers, to believe that royal scribes played any significant part in the production of Kings as the book exists today. What member of a royal court would have dared to record the stories of Ahab and Naboth, of Jezebel’s violence against the prophets, of the abominations and sodomies during the reign of Rehoboam, of Ahaz’s defilement of the altar, or of Manasseh’s dealings with wizards and familiar spirits? . . . These records were written by men who had access to the bed chambers of kings (1 Kings 1:1-4) and were acquainted with the secret connivings that went on in the inner chambers of royal courts. The prophets of Israel found themselves in just such categories (1 Kings 1:11-27). The more carefully these records are examined, the more clear it is that prophets played a major role in their production. Only prophets could have produced many of the most characteristic items that form so basic a part of our present Book of Kings. . . . We know prophets played an important part in keeping records of the kings, for of David we are told that his deeds were written "in the records of Samuel the seer, the records of Nathan the prophet and the records of Gad the seer" (2Chr. 9:29). . . . In the Hebrew Scriptures the Book of Kings has its place among the "former prophets." This points definitely to the prophetic origin of these writings." Ref-0839, pp. 194-195.

KJV - apocrypha : ☪ + "Some devotees of the King James Version today are shocked to find out that, like its predecessors, the 1611 Version included the Apocrypha between the Old and New Testaments. But unlike its predecessors, which clearly stated that the apocryphal books were not part of the canon of Scripture, the 1611 Version contained no comments about the canonicity of the Apocrypha, thus leaving the question open. The Puritans requested that copies be printed without the Apocrypha, but to no avail. In 1615 Archbishop Abbot prohibited the issues of Bibles without the Apocrypha. It was not until 1629 that the King James Bible was available both with and without the Apocrypha." Ref-0684, p. 24. "It is true that the publisher of the 1611 edition did insert the Apocrypha between the Testaments, but it was never included within the Old Testament text as it was so done in the Hexapla, in Vaticanus, and Sinaiticus. The Apocrypha section from the Cambridge Group of the 1611 translators rendered the entire work into English but for historical purposes only -- not as inspired Scripture. The Apocrypha was removed even from the space between the Testaments in the second edition." Ref-0186, p. 16.

"While teaching the Greek text of Romans 5:11 years ago at seminary, I told my third-year class that here we had an example of one of the rare places in the KJV where we had an actual error. Later I did some seventeenth-century English study. Encountering the expression "to be at one with" in Shakespeare, I then realized that "at-one-ment" used to mean "reconciliation." The KJV was right, and I was wrong!" Ref-0684, p. 28. "The early printings of the King James Bible included many errors. Many of these arose from weaknesses in the book production processes of the period. Proofing was often a haphazard business." Ref-0686, p. 213. "The first printing of the King James Bible in 1611 included a number of printing errors. For example, a small slip in the typesetting of the description of the interior of the tabernacle led to the following reading (Exodus 28:11): And for the north side the hangings were an hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their sockets of brass twenty; the hoops of the pillars and their fillets of silver. But there were probably few who noticed, let alone cared, that the pillars really book hooks, not hoops. This error was corrected in the 1613 reprint." Ref-0686, pp. 214-215. "A further difference between the 1611 printing of the work and the 1613 reprint is of interest. Their variant translations of Ruth 3:15 led to the early printing being known as the "Great He Bible" (1611) and the later one as the "Great She Bible" (1613) respectively. The passage in question describes how Boaz measured out "six measures of barley," and gave it to Ruth. The "Great He Bible" then has Boaz going off to a nearby city, whereas the "Great She Bible" reports it is Ruth who made this journey. The "Great She Bible" also caused bewilderment to some of its readers by confusing Jesus and Judas at one point (Matthew 26:36)." Ref-0686, p. 215. ". . . a warning to the Israelites about the devious ways of the Midianites took an unusual turn, thanks to an amusing misprint in one edition (Numbers 25:17-18): "Vex the Midianites, and smite them: For they vex you with their wives." The possibilities suggested by this passage are immense and intriguing, to say the least. Yet "wives" was merely a misprint for "wiles." More serious was the misprint in an edition of 1631, which rendered Exodus 20:14 as follows: "Thou shalt commit adultery." The omission of the word "not" was speedily corrected, . . . The first edition of the King James Bible to be published by Oxford University Press appeared in 1675; this was followed in 1682 by a sumptuous edition prepared by the Oxford printer John Baskett. The value of the edition was greatly reduced by its many printing errors. For example, it made reference to the "Parable of the Vinegar" instead of the "Parable of the Vineyard" -- an error which led it to being nicknamed the "Vinegar Bible." Ref-0686, p. 216. In Mtt. 6:13, the τοῦ πονηροῦ, a substantive adjective, is translated "evil," but see exegesis - Mtt. 6:13. "Plummer pointed out that the King James translation of this verse [Luke 3:23] "is impossible" in light of the Greek text. Cranmer led the way in this mistaken translation in the Bible of 1539, and the later versions followed it. According to Plummer, the proper translation is: "Jesus himself was about thirty years of age when He began." Alford said the verse should be translated: "'Jesus was about thirty years old when He began' (His ministry); not, 'began to be about,' & c., which is ungrammatical." A. T. Robertson wrote that the translation "'began to be about thirty years of age,' is an impossible translation." Renald E. Showers, New Testament Chronology and the Decree of Daniel 9, Grace Journal Volume 11 Number 1, p. 30. In Eze. 21:10,13, the KJV uses "rod" where the context clearly is about the "scepter" ruling from the throne of David (cf. Gen. 49:10, KJV).

KJV - Geneva Bible preferred : ☉ + "In spite of its impressive origins, the Authorized Version received "mixed reviews" at first. Many of the Puritans, Calvinist, and other strict Protestants were not satisfied with it, and continued to use the Geneva Bible, which remained in print until 1644. It is worth noting that the colonists who founded New England took the Geneva, not the King James Version, with them to the New World. They felt the latter reflected "high church" tendencies. Weigle writes regarding the reception of the new version: "For eighty years after its publication in 1611, the King James Version endured bitter attacks. It was denounced as theologically unsound and ecclesiastically biased, as truckling to the king and unduly deferring too his belief in witchcraft, as untrue to the Hebrew text and relying too much on the Septuagint." Ref-0684, p. 24. "[The] Geneva Bible, went through 200 editions, with one or more editions every year for 56 consecutive years." Bible Translation Since John Wycliffe, Christian History : John Wycliffe. 1983.

KJV - influence : ☉ + "Without the King James Bible, there would have been no Paradise Lost, no Pilgrim's Progress, no Handel's Messiah, no Negro spirituals, and no Gettysburg Address. These, and innumerable other works, were inspired by the language of this Bible. Without this Bible, the culture of the English-speaking world would have been immeasurably impoverished." Ref-0686, p. 2.

KJV - italics were roman type : ☉ + "The first printing used black letter type, despite the fact that this was beginning to fall out of favor, being increasingly seen as archaic. It is possible that the selection of this type was intended to add to the gravity of the final text. A small amount of roman type was used to set words inserted by the translators (to distinguish this from the remainder of the text)." Ref-0686, p. 200.

KJV - only : Mtt. 5:17-18 ☉ "Occasionally one sees a sign in front of a church building reading: "We use only the 1611 Authorized King James Version." These churches mean well in seeking to maintain a great tradition. However, regarding "the 1611 version," they are in error. If such readers were to be handed a copy of the real 1611 KJV (or the reprint of the same in Roman type), most of them would be unable to follow the archaic spelling and punctuation. Many would probably be offended to find the Apocrypha included as well. What they are really using is the 1769 revision (or a later Americanized edition of the same from the Bible Society)." Ref-0684, p. 25. "Many evangelicals and KJV-only advocates assert that the Bible provides explicit evidence for a doctrine of miraculous preservation. In their assertions, they apply the doctrine to a particular version of the Bible, most often the King James Version (KJV) of 1611. Yet an examination of the exegetical evidence from commonly cited biblical texts supports only a general promise of preserving the truth of God's message to mankind, not a particular version of the Bible. . . . Since historical evidence demonstrates that scribal errors exist in every extant manuscript, the conclusion to be drawn is that the Bible has been providentially preserved by means of secondary causation through the plethora of available manuscripts and not through miraculous preservation of particular manuscripts and versions." Jon Rehurek, "Preservation of the Bible: Providential or Miraculous? The Biblical View", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 71:90, p. 71. "Combs rebuts, "If not one 'jot' or 'tittle' is to be changed, then they should insist on using only the 1611 edition of the KJV since 'jot' and 'tittle' certainly involve spelling, and there have been thousands of spelling changes since 1611." Jon Rehurek, "Preservation of the Bible: Providential or Miraculous? The Biblical View", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 71:90, pp. 76-77. "The point is that if these verse [Mtt. 5:17-18] claim miraculous preservation of the Scriptures themselves, the manuscript evidence contradicts Jesus' words. Not available manuscripts contain the inerrant autographic text (i.e., unchanged 'jot' or 'tittle') in totality. Combs writes, Jesus is not teaching in this verse 'inerrant preservation of the Words of the Bible.' Instead, Jesus is defending the "nature, extent, and duration of its [OT authority] validity and continuity." Jon Rehurek, "Preservation of the Bible: Providential or Miraculous? The Biblical View", Ref-0164, Vol. 19 No. 1, Spring 2008, 71:90, p. 77. "By stark contrast, that person who simply puts his/her faith in God's promise to preserve His Word (Jer. 1:12; Ps. 12:6-7; Isa. 40:8; Mark 13:31) concludes that God has done so and that it is to be found where He originally deposited it, namely, in the Hebrew Masoretic Text. It is likewise faithfully preserved in the English translation of the 1611 King James Bible. This person is left with maximum certainty, with peace of heart and peace of mind." Ref-0186, p. 12. "All questions related to the preservation and transmission of the Text are accepted as having been accomplished via providential preservation in fulfillment of God's promises to so do. Exhaustive study into the matter has led to the further conclusion that this preserved Text has best and most faith fully been rendered into English by the A.D. 1611 King James translators." Ref-0186, p. 20. But, as these KJV-only proponents are fond of appealing to Mtt. 5:17-18 (every jot and tittle), the 1611 can't just be "best and most faithful," it must be perfect which is easily demonstrated as not the case. Moreover, they should solely be utilizing the 1611 edition, not a later edition with thousands of corrections, as minor as they may be. "If, for instance, his commitment to inerrancy is not firmly established or if it only extends to the "originals", he will be tempted and almost invariably eventually succumb to relegating difficulties to the category of so-called "scribal errors" in the text in order to ameliorate the problem." KJV - unauthorized : ☉ "The most famous English Bible of all time is often called the Authorized Version (AV), a misnomer because it was never officially sanctioned by either the monarchy or the clerical hierarchy (though its title page claimed that it was "appointed to be read in Churches")." Ref-0240, p. 50. "There is no record of any final royal authorization of the completed translation -- for example, by an Order in Council. However, it is important to note that a fire at Whitehall in January 1618 led to the destruction of the records of the Council, including its registers, for the period 1600-13. The fact that there is no known royal "authorization" for the translation cannot necessarily be taken to imply such authorization was not forthcoming." Ref-0686, p. 164. "It is sometimes assumed that the words "appointed to be read in churches" imply that the work has been authorized for this purpose. In fact, this is not the case. Although a twenty-first-century reader would naturally interpret the word "appointed" to mean "authorized," this is not the seventeenth-century meaning of the English term. The words -- which were in any case omitted from many later editions -- simply mean that the work was laid out in a way suitable for public reading in churches. . . . there is no documentary evidence that the 1611 Bible ever received final written authorization from the bishops, Privy Council, or the king. While it is possible that such authorization -- which would have taken the form of an Order in Council -- may have been lost in the Whitehall fire of January 12, 1618 (which destroyed the Privy Council registers for the years 1600-13), it is more likely that no such order ever existed." According to the King James Bible, Paul and his colleagues "rejoice in hope of the glory of God . . . we glory in tribulations . . . we also joy in God." The same Greek verb -- which would normally be translated as "rejoice" -- is, in fact, being translated using different words (here italicized) in each of the three cases. There can be no doubt that this flexibility allowed the translators to achieve a judicious verbal balance that enhanced the attractiveness of the resulting work. Yet inevitably, a price was paid for this in terms of the accuracy that some had hoped for." Ref-0686, pp. 194-195. "The difficulty in translating what are usually referred to as "gospel parallels" can be seen by comparing the following, bearing in mind that exactly the same Greek words are being translated in each case. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak (Matthew 26:41). Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak (Mark 14:38). The casual reader might gain the impression that quite different Greek words were being translated in each passage; in fact, the Greek text is identical in each case." Ref-0686, p. 240. "We have already noted some of the issues that are of importance here -- for example, the decision not to translate each Hebrew or Greek word with exactly the same English word or phrase in every case. While this unquestionably led to a more elegant English translation, issues of accuracy inevitably arose. For example, the same Hebrew word -- khiyday -- is translated in a number of different ways, including "riddle" (Judges 14:12-17; Ezekiel 17:2), "hard question" (1 Kings 10:1), "dark saying" (Psalm 49:5; Proverbs 1:6), and "dark sentence" (Daniel 8:23)." - Koran - origin : ☪ ". . . the Islamic Koran was compiled by an individual, Zaid ibn Thabit, under the guidance of Mohammed's father-in-law, Abu-Bekr. Additionally, in A.D. 650 a group of Arab scholars produced a unified version and destroyed all variant copies to preserve the unity of the Koran." Ref-0024, p. 155.

Ref-0160, p. 189.
- Koran - polygamy : ☪ + Surah 4:3; Surah 33:50; "Muhammad received a revelation from God that a man should have no more than four wives at one time, yet he had many more. A Muslim defender of Muhammad, writing in The Prophet of Islam as the Ideal Husband, admitted that he had fifteen wives!" Ref-0161, p. 171.
- Koran - prayer direction : ☪ + Surah 2:145; "Koranic commentators explain that 'thy qiblah' [direction of prayer for Moslems] is clearly the Ka'bah of Mecca, while 'their qiblah' [direction of prayer for Jews] refers to the Temple Mount in Jerusalem." Palazzi, Abdul Hadi, cited by Ref-0160, p. 95.

Koran - predestination - double : ☪ + Surah 35:8. "This overpowering picture of God in the Qur'an has created its own tension in Islamic theology regarding God's absolute sovereignty and man's free will. 'Orthodox Islam teaches the absolute predestination of both good and evil, that all our thoughts, words and deeds, whether good or evil, were foreseen, foreordained, determined and decreed from all eternity, and that everything that happens takes place according to what has been written for it. There was a great discussion among the early Muslim theologians as to free will and predestination, but the free-will parties (al-qadariyya) were ultimately defeated.'" Ref-0161, p. 28.

Koran - promised land : ☪ + Surah 5:20; Surah 17:104; "Remember Moses said to his people: 'O my People! Call in remembrance the favor Of Allah unto you, when He Produced prophets among you, Made you kings, [722] and gave You what He had not given To any other among the peoples. O my people! enter The holy land which Allah hath assigned unto you, And turn not back Ignominiously, for then Will ye be overthrown, To your own ruin.'" Footnote 722 - "From the slavery of Egypt the Children of Israel were made free and independent, and thus each man became as it were a king, if only he had obeyed Allah and followed the lead of Moses." Ref-0136, Surah 5:20-21, p. 253. "That generation was not to see the Holy Land. All those that were twenty years old and upward were to die in the wilderness: 'your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness.' (Num. 14:29). Only those who were then children would reach the promised land. And so it happened. . . Forty years afterwards they crossed the Jordan opposite what is now Jericho. . . ." Koran - salvation - unsure : ☪ "Faruqi insists that 'great as it may be in the eyes of Islam for any person to make the decision to enter the faith, the entry constitutes no guarantee of personal justification in the eyes of God. . . there is nothing the new initiate can do which would assure him or her of salvation.'" Ref-0161, p. 126.

Koran - salvation by works : ☪ + Surah 23:102-103; Surah 39:61

Koran - Satan : ☪ + Surah 38:71-77. "There is a good deal of Islamic controversy regarding the identity of Satan. Some Qur'anic evidence seems to point to Satan as an angelic being. However, we are also told in the Qur'an that angels cannot disobey God and yet Satan obviously did. Therefore, many Muslim theologians have held the opinion that Satan belonged to the species of jinn." Ref-0161, p. 37.

Koran - Satanic verses : ☪ + Surah 22:51; Surah 22:53-54; Surah 53:19-23. "The earliest biographers of the prophet mention an interesting incident that occurred during this mid-Meccan period. It is related that in one of his sermons in front of the leaders of the Meccan antagonists, Muhammad, in order to win the support of his opponents, proclaimed that the favorite deities al-Lat, al-Uzza, and Manat could be considered divine beings whose intercession was effectual with God. But soon the prophet believed these words to be interpolations of Satan and substituted the words that we now have in [Surah 53:19-23] (see also [Surah 22:51]). These have become known as the 'Satanic verses.'" Ref-0161, p. 72. One source lists the original verses as: "Did you consider al-hat and al-Uzza And al-Manat, the third, the other? Those are the swans exalted; Their intercession is expected; Their likes are not neglected." cited in Ref-0161, p. 193. "What the Qur'an calls 'the satanic verses' (Surah 22:53-54) allowed the Meccans temporarily to keep their three idols Allat, Al-Uzza, and Manat (cf. Surah 53) as mediators to Allah, the supreme God. Then Mhumannad is said to have realized that these verses, which were recited for a time, were from Satan. So he revised Surah 22 to exclude the three goddesses by speaking against any mediation to Allah. By encouraging people to pray to Allah directly, he was able to do away with what remained of the 360 gods." Imad N. Shehadeh, "Do Muslims and Christians Believe in the Same God?", Ref-0200, vol. 161 no. 641, January-March 2004 (pp. 14-26), p. 23.

He will descend by resting his hands on the wings of two angels. He will descend onto a white minaret set in the eastern part of Damascus. He will invite the whole world to become Muslim including Christians and Jews, He will kill the anti-Christ, He will break the cross, kill all the swine, end all wars, and will become a judge. Ref-0161, p. 18. "People who have believed there are other deities were called mushrikeen, 'sharers with God.' Koran - uneducated - Mohammed : ☪ + Surah 7:157. "It is questionable whether Muhammed was actually illiterate. As one authority notes, the Arabic words al ummi, translated 'the unlettered' prophet in the Qur'an (Surah 7:157), 'may be [rendered] heathen rather than illiterate.' Pfander agrees, affirming that the Arabic phrase does not mean 'the Unlettered Prophet' but 'the Gentile Prophet'. . . and does not imply illiteracy. Indeed, this is how the term is rendered in Surah 62:2, as do several other suras (Surah 2:72; 3:19,69; 7:156)." Ref-0161, p. 190.

can be explained by human language history -- i.e. human genetic history also arose in a brief period just a few thousand years ago. * All language families arose in a brief period just a few thousand years ago (not the millions of years evolutionists believe in." This meaning is disputed by Keil who argues that the Hebrew word rendered 'pure' means purity from sin rather than linguistic clarity, and also that the Hebrew noun means lip and 'does not stand for language.' But Keil seems to ignore the fact that in Genesis 11:1-9 this noun is so used no less than four times in connection with the confusion of tongues at Babel. As for the idea of moral purity, it is admitted that this is the correct meaning. But this only adds to the force of the idea of linguistic unity, for the curse of language multiplicity came because of the sinful speech of man upon that occasion." Ref-0183, p. 234.

[He] instituted language as the vehicle of communication between man and himself.'¹¹ Similarly, Packer points out that Genesis 'shows us that human thought and speech have their counterparts and archetypes in [God]'.¹¹ Further more, God continued to employ human language as His medium of communication throughout biblical history. When God spoke directly to Moses, He used intelligible human language; when he spoke to His prophets He used intelligible human language; when Jesus taught He used intelligible human language; when He appeared to Saul, He used intelligible human language. . . . God is sovereign and He wills to be understood (2 Tim. 3:15-17). and actively reveals Himself to us.¹⁵ Human language 'offers no resistance to his purposes and cannot frustrate his desire to communicate.'¹⁶ As E. R. Clendenen succinctly writes: 'Language works. A skillful reader will experience what a skillful communicator intended to accomplish through the agency of a text as an interface takes place between the worlds of the author, text, and reader.'¹⁷ Indeed, everyday human experience confirms this to be so. As innate users of language, human beings readily engage in meaningful linguistic communication. Such communication is not always easy, but it is never impossible." Andrew S. Kulikovsky, The Bible and Hermeneutics, Ref-0691 Vol 19(3) ISSN 1036-2916, 14:20, p. 15. "While it is true that an infinite God must in some way accommodate Himself to finite human ways of knowing in order to reveal His nature, law and gospel, this does not imply the loss of truth, nor the lessening of Scriptural authority. Accommodation occurs specifically in the use of human words and concepts, and refers to the manner or mode of revelation, not to the quality and integrity of the revelation itself.⁴⁹ It is adaptation to human finitude, not accommodation to human error. Communication directed at mankind may involve less precision, but imprecision must not be confused with error. Inerrantists do not require scientific precision in order for a statement to be true.⁵⁰" Andrew S. Kulikovsky, The Bible and Hermeneutics, Ref-0691 Vol 19(3) ISSN 1036-2916, 14:20, p. 18.

"Furthermore, arguing that interpretation is always uncertain due to the supposed limitations of language is ultimately self-defeating and incoherent, as Mcquilk and Mullen point out: 'If we do not do interpretation on the premise that God has spoken and that he can be understood, that truth about him can be communicated accurately in words, we run the danger of ending up where postmodern thinking has taken some proponents: speaking nonsense. That is, they use their own words in an attempt to communicate their own thought about how impossible communication with words is.'³⁶" Andrew S. Kulikovsky, The Bible and Hermeneutics, Ref-0691 Vol 19(3) ISSN 1036-2916, 14:20, p. 17 "If God's communication is not objectively understandable, then He has essentially failed to communicate. In effect, He may as well not have spoken at all! If this is the case, then on what basis can the Bible be regarded as the word of God? What authority can it possibly have? Indeed, what is the point of having an authoritative, infallible, inerrant message if it is impossible to ascertain its meaning?" Andrew S. languages - biblical - importance : ☪ + "The question of primary importance here is, whether the word translated by person meant the same in the original language that person means in ours. And to find this out, it is not enough to know merely the meaning of the word person in English at the time that the translation was made; but, also, the meaning of the corresponding word in the original document at the time when it was written. If, at the time when the translation is made, there is not in the language into which the translation is made, a word corresponding exactly to the meaning of the original, one of three things must be done: either a new word must be coined, or a new meaning must be given to an old word, or the word of the original must be adopted into the translation. Many of the ambiguities of the Scriptures arise from this almost insurmountable difficulty in making a correct translation from the original text. To coin new words, or to take over a word from the original, is often to make the version unintelligible to the ordinary reader for whom the version is primarily prepared; while, to use an old word in a new meaning is to lay the reader open to a misunderstanding of the true sense of a passage. This is the fundamental reason why all appeals in matters of biblical doctrine should be made to the original languages of the Scripture. This is the true and sufficient reason why all discussion among scholars as to the meaning of disputed passages should be based upon the ipsissima verba. This is a firm and ever existing ground for the insistence of the church, that her teachers shall be thoroughly conversant with the original languages of the Word of God." R. D. Wilson, Studies in the Book of Daniel, pp. 83-84 "By the study of the Scriptures in their original languages . . . [Luther] became convinced that reading Greek and Hebrew was one of the greatest privileges and responsibilities of the Reformation preacher, so as to preserve a pure gospel. Few arguments for the importance of biblical languages are clearer than Luther's 1524 treatise, "To the Councilmen of All Cities in Germany That They Establish and Maintain Christian Schools." The following is an excerpt from this work. "And let us be sure of this we will not long preserve the gospel without the languages. The languages are the sheath in which the sword of the Spirit is contained; they are the casket in which this jewel is enshrined. . . If through our neglect we let the languages go (which God forbid!), we shall . . . lose the gospel . . . Experience too has proved this and still gives evidence of it. For as soon as the languages declined to the vanishing point, after the apostolic age, the gospel and faith and Christianity itself declined more and more . . . On the other hand, now that the languages have been revived, they are bringing with them so bright a light and accomplishing such great things that the whole world stands amazed and has to acknowledge that we have the gospel just as pure and undefiled as the apostles had it, that it has been wholly restored to its original purity, far beyond what it was in the days of St. Jerome and St. Augustine . . . A simple preacher (it is true) has so many clear passages and text available through translations that he can know and teach Christ, lead a holy life, and preach to others. But when it comes to interpreting Scripture, and working with it on your own, and disputing with those who cite it incorrectly, he is unequal to the task; that cannot be done without languages. Now there must always be such prophets in the Christian church who can dig into Scripture, expound it, and carry on disputations. A saintly life and right doctrine are not enough. Hence languages are absolutely and altogether necessary in the Christian church, as are the prophets or interpreters; although it is not necessary that every Christian or every preacher be such a prophet, as St. Paul points out in 1 Corinthians 12 and Ephesians 4 . . . " Ref-0184, pp. 118-119. "But a man cannot rightly order his own soul unless he exercises himself day and night in the Word of God. He can do that most readily if he is well versed in such languages as Hebrew and Greek, for a right understanding of the Old Testament is difficult without the one, and a right understanding of the New is equally difficult without the other." Ulrich Zwingli (1484-1531), "On the Education of Youth", in Zwingli and Bullinger cited in Ref-0184, p. 135. "There are undreamed of possibilities of interpretation of which the expositor is entirely oblivious as he studies the English Bible, which are easily accessible to the one who will take the trouble to work in the Greek New Testament." Ref-0946, p. 74. ". . . the English language is not equipped to handle the total meaning of some of the Greek words in the New Testament, with the result that much rich truth is left behind in the process of translating, truth which the average audience seldom if ever hears because of the ignorance of the Greek text on the part of so many preachers of the Word." Ref-0946, p. 86. "What surface exposition is done on the basis of the English translation, good and correct in itself, is abysmally inadequate in many instances. Given two men of equal abilities, filled with the Spirit, the one who uses his Greek text is always the more accurate and able expositor of the Word. The Holy Spirit does the best he can with what the preacher gives Him. When the preacher brings to his study the tools of scholarship, the Holy Spirit is able to lead him into more, deeper, and clearer truth than He can the one who confines himself to the translations." Ref-0946, p. 88. "In an art gallery, a copy of an original painting is never as good as the masterpiece which the artist painted. The lights and shadows are never as clearly marked, the colors never so vivid. It is so with respect to the English New Testament. The portraits of the Lord Jesus are true copies of those in the Greek, but they are never so vivid and clear." Ref-0946, p. 113. "One of the most heart-breaking and deplorable things in the 2000 years of church history, is the almost universal neglect by preachers, of the Greek New Testament, with the consequent impoverishment of its message. What a wealth of truth the church has missed in all these years, hidden away back there in the Greek text." Ref-0946, p. 114. "He should inform them that the Greek language can concentrate more ideas in one word than the English can, and that the best translators can do in a case like that, is to choose an English word that will give the reader the predominating idea in the Greek word, and leave such details as cannot be brought over into English, back in the Greek text. Is it these details, these delicate shades of meaning, which the expositor is bringing out." Ref-0946, p. 136. "The pastor should not be at all hesitant about using his Greek in the pulpit. When his people know that he is a diligent student of the Word, and spends his time in intensive study in his preparation for his messages instead of sipping pink tea with the ladies, when they know that he brings the tools of Greek scholarship to the study of the Word, they will think all the more of him for it. There is no premium put upon ignorance. An educated ministry that is spiritual, is one of the most beautiful things in all the world." Ref-0946, p. 141.

Also, the play on the Greek words petra and petros in Matthew 16:18 cannot be reproduced in Hebrew or Aramaic and is best explained as occurring in a discussion originally carried on in Greek. In all likelihood, Jesus' conversations with the Syrophenician woman, the Roman centurion, and Pilate were in Greek. His vow in Acts 18:18 is based on Numbers 6:2,5,9, and 18. His desire to be in Jerusalem for Pentecost in Acts 20:16 is based on Deuteronomy 16:16. The strongest passage is Acts 21:17-26, where we see Paul himself, the apostle of freedom from the law, keeping the law. The believer is free from the law, but he is also free to keep parts of it. Thus, if a Jewish believer feels the need to refrain from eating pork, he is free to do so. The same is true for all the other commandments of the Law of Moses. One danger is the idea that by doing so he is contributing to his own justification and sanctification. This is false and should be avoided. The second danger is in one's expecting others to keep the same commandments he has decided to keep. This is equally wrong and crosses into legalism. The one who exercises his freedom to keep the law must recognized and respect another's freedom not to keep it." Arnold Fruchtenbaum, Ref-1217, pp. 118-119.

Both the friends and opponents of dispensationalism could agree that the eternal moral law of God applies to every dispensation. By 'the eternal moral law of God' we do not mean the Mosaic law or the Ten Commandments, but the eternal principles of righteousness which are a reflection of the character of God. God's standard of holiness has always been nothing less than His own character or glory (Rom. 3:23). Moses did not originate this moral law and it did not cease at the end of the age of Mosaic law. When dispensationalists say that the Ten Commandments are done away, they mean that believers are not under the Mosaic setting of the eternal moral law. They recognized that all the moral principles of the Mosaic age reappear for the church in a setting of grace. "The παιδαγωγός emerges from ancient literature not as the tutor leading a child on to something (a function often attributed to the law in the life of an individual in accordance with this understanding of Gal. 3:24-25), nor as an excessively harsh character, but as a servant who closely supervises, monitors and watches over a young child." Like the word 'tutor,' the rendering 'schoolmaster' in the King James Version is also misleading. The παιδαγωγός 'was distinguished from the didaskalos, for he gave no formal instruction but administered the directives of the father in a custodial manner -- though of course indirectly he taught by the supervision he gave and the discipline he administered.' It would seem reasonable, therefore, that a better translation for παιδαγωγός is 'custodian,' since the word 'tutor' is too closely associated with the idea of formal teaching." Michael J. Smith, "The Role of the Pedagogue in Galatians" Ref-0200, Volume 163 Number 650 April-June 2006, 197:214, p. 198. "Ramsay adds another differentiation between the pedagogues in Greek and Roman cultures, explaining why some had teaching duties while others did not. 'In that day [i.e., Paul's time] it would appear that the paidagogoi were trusted servants and faithful attendants, standing in very close relation to the family (in which they were slaves). Their duty was not to teach any child under their charge, but simply to guard him. Among the Romans, who adopted this institution from the Greeks, the paidagogos gave some home instruction to the child: he was a Greek-speaking slave, who looked after the child, and taught him to use the Greek language,' not by means of formal instruction but in daily conversation." Michael J. Smith, "The Role of the Pedagogue in Galatians" Ref-0200, Volume 163 Number 650 April-June 2006, 197:214, p. 200. "The Law was a παιδαγωγός in that it had a temporary function. One of the most obvious aspects of the pedagogue-child relationship in any culture is that it is temporary. 'While the young master was a child he differed not at all from a slave. [When he reached maturity], however, the pedagogue's dominance ended and the young man became master de facto and not simply de jure.'" Michael J. between the different covenants of the Old Testament and their application to Israel and to believers who are 'sons of Abraham' by faith (Gal. 3:7). (1) The Old (Mosaic) covenant was conditional and was broken by Israel. (Jer. 31:32). (2) The New Covenant was made with the same people (Israel) as the Mosaic Covenant (Jer. 31:32-33). (3) The Old Covenant is obsolete and vanishing (Heb. 8:13). People of faith are no longer under it (Heb. 9:10; Gal. 3:25; 5:18). (4) Salvation is by faith based on participation in the Abrahamic Covenant -- which preceded the Mosaic Covenant and was not annulled by it (Gal. 3:7-18). Gentiles participate in the blessing of Abraham (Gen. 12:3) via faith in Christ (Gal. 3:8,14) who fulfilled the law (Mtt. 5:17). The Abrahamic Covenant is not abolished by the passing away of the Mosaic Covenant (Gal. 3:17). (5) Gentiles were strangers from the covenants (plural), having no hope and without God. Christ abolished in His flesh the law of commandments (the Mosaic Covenant, which separated Jews from Gentiles) creating one new man -- the church (Eph. 2:12-15). (6) The covenants given to Israel which remain in effect include the Abrahamic Covenant (Gen. 12:1-3; Gen. 15:1-21) and the three covenants which spring forth from it: the Land Covenant (Ex. 6:4; Deu. 29:1-12), the Davidic Covenant (2S. 7:8-17; 1Chr. 17:9-16; Ps. 89:19-51; Ps. 132:10; Luke 1:32-33), and the New Covenant (Jer. 31:31-40; Mtt. 26:28; Mark 14:24; Luke 22:14-20; Rom. 11:26-27). (7) The law was meant to expose our sin (Rom. 3:19; 5:20; 7:7), guide us, and point us to Christ (Gal. 3:19-25). (8) The law is an all-or-nothing proposition. Those who would seek to be justified by the law have become estranged from Christ (Gal. 3:10; 5:3-4; Jas. 2:10). (9) No one is justified (declared righteous) by the law (Gal. 3:11). Justification has always been by faith in God based on the work of Christ (Gen. 15:6; Gal. 3:6). (10) Believers are now subject to the law of Christ, the law of the Spirit (Rom. 8:2; 1Cor. 9:21; Gal. 6:2; Jas. 1:25; Jas. 2:12).

law - vs. faith : Acts 13:38-39; Rom. 9:32; Rom. 10:3-5; Php. 3:9 ☪ "Is not, then [after Abraham], a period of law covering fifteen centuries superfluous, a needless delay, indeed a retrogression? There [in Abraham] a direct inward life of faith -- here [under the Law] outward mediating forms; there, restful sublime simplicity -- here, complexity, scarcely to be comprehended: there the word and the promise prevailing -- here, demand and symbol dominating. But the simpler is nobler than the complicated, and the word is more direct than the symbol; the promise is more creative than the command, and the inward higher than the form." These same passages call for the implementation of covenant curses for disobedience to the law. By context these texts do not refer to ethnic or social markers identifying Israel. Instead, they refer to the entire Mosaic legislation including every facet of that law. The point is that such references to works of the law are virtually identical with Paul's use of "works of the law" in both Galatians and Romans . . . In the intertestamental period, sectarian authors at Qumran spoke of the members of their community as "doers/workers of the law" . . . They did not indicate that "the law" in such cases was limited to circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, or dietary regulations." William D. law and prophets - not writings : Acts 28:23 ☪ The third division of Jewish scriptures -- the writings -- are not mentioned. This is probably due to the Jewish view of inspiration. The law (Torah) is said to be of greatest authority, as it is the very words of God dictated directly to a human scribe. The Prophets (Nevi'im) are of lesser authority, being God's messages spoken through the mouths of men. The Writings (Ketubim) are considered to be of least authority, as they are reckoned to be the words of men whose thinking was guided by God. Jesus used all three sections of the Old Testament (Luke 24:44) because, as far as he and the apostles were concerned, all of the Hebrew Scriptures were of equal validity. Ref-0011, p. 10.

In the providence of God, He turns evil for good and accomplishes His will nonetheless. Accurate recording of human lies does not constitute an endorsement by God. For example, see Dan. 3:16 where people of God stood in truth and God brought miraculous deliverance. A lie "in the service of God" misrepresents God and demonstrates a lack of faith -- it elevates our human need to manipulate consequences over the sovereignty of God.

Ref-1219, par. 3477. "3712 Most origin-of-life researchers recognized that, even if there had been a favorable prebiotic soup, many destructive chemical processes would have necessarily been at work at the same time. 20 Simulation experiments of the type performed by Stanley Miller had repeatedly demonstrated this. They have invariably produced nonbiological substances in addition to biological building blocks such as amino acids. Without intelligent intervention, these other substances will react readily with biologically relevant building blocks to form biologically irrelevant compounds--chemically insoluble sludge. To prevent this from happening and to move the simulation of chemical evolution along a biologically promising trajectory, experimenters often remove those chemicals that degrade or transform amino acids into nonbiologically relevant compounds. They also must artificially manipulate the initial conditions in their experiments. For example, rather than using both short-and long-wavelength ultraviolet light, which would have been present in any realistic early atmosphere, they use only short-wavelength UV. Why? The presence of the long-wavelength UV light quickly degrades amino acids." Ref-1219, par. 3712. "... the very fact that these experiments required so much intervention seemed significant. By involving "programming" and "engineering" in simulations of the origin of life, these new approaches had introduced an elephant into the room that no one wanted to talk about, especially not in the methods sections of scientific papers."  "On the fourth day the luminaries were made; because God, who possesses foreknowledge, knew the follies of the vain philosophers, that they were going to say, that the things which grow on the earth are produced from the heavenly bodies, so as to exclude God. In order, therefore, that the truth might be obvious, the plants and seeds were produced prior to the heavenly bodies, for what is posterior cannot produce that which is prior. And these contain the pattern and type of a great mystery. For the sun is a type of God, and the moon of man. And as the sun far surpasses the moon in power and glory, so far does God surpass man. And as the sun remains ever full, never becoming less, so does God always abide perfect, being full of all power, and understanding, and wisdom, and immortality, and all good. But the moon wanes monthly, and in a manner dies, being a type of man; then it is born again, and is crescent, for a pattern of the future resurrection." The early church used ἕδωρ ζῶον to refer to running water in which believers were baptized (Didache 7:1-2). Each day priests circled the altar while the worshipers waved their lulabs. The Hallel (Ps. 113-18) was recited or sung on each of the eight days. The officiating priest ascended the altar ramp and, using two silver bowls, one for water, the other for wine, poured out the libation. . . . In John 7 Jesus arrives in Jerusalem during the latter part of the Festival of Booths . . . Given the time (the Feast of Tabernacles), the place (the temple), and the theme (water), such a declaration was bold and dramatic. But, on the other hand, it is the translation of Adonai, supreme Lord, an incommunicable name of God, and the substitute for Jehovah, a name the Jews would not pronounce. It is in this sense that Christ is, The Lord, The Lord of Lords, The Lord God. . . This is the reason why no one can call him Lord, but by the Holy Ghost (1Cor. 12:3). . . Luke - accuracy : Luke 1:1; Acts 1:1 ☩ "The accuracy of Luke's use of the various titles of the Roman Empire has been compared to the easy and confident way in which an Oxford man in ordinary conversation will refer to the Heads of Oxford colleges by their proper titles -- the Provost of Oriel, the Master of Balliol, the Rector of Exeter the President of Magdalen, and so on. A non-Oxonian like the present writer never feels quite at home with the multiplicity of these Oxford titles. But Luke had a further difficulty in that the titles sometimes did not remain the same for any great length of time; a province might pass from senatorial government to administration by a direct representative of the emperor, and would then be governed no longer by a proconsul but by an imperial legate (legatus pro praetore)." Ref-0117, p. 339. "Luke was of Gentile origin. This is inferred from the fact that he is not reckoned among those 'who are from the circumcision' (Col. 4:11 cf. Col. 4:14). . . . Luke was with Paul on his last trip to Jerusalem and seems to have been an eyewitness to Paul's arrest at the Temple as recorded in Acts 21. . . . The point is that when the Jews accused Paul of polluting the Temple by bringing Gentiles therein, why did they not allude to Trophimus? Why did they not include Luke who was also with Paul in the streets of Jerusalem (Acts 21:15-18, e.g., 'we', 'us')?" Ref-0185, s.v. Luke but see [Ref-0186, p18n3 for reasons Col. 4:11,14 may be inconclusive.] ". . . when the Jews accused Paul of polluting the Temple by bringing Gentiles therein, why did they only allude to Trophimus? Why did they not include Luke who was also with Paul in the streets of Jerusalem (Acts 21:15-18, e.g., "we", "us")? The fact that Luke was not mentioned in the accusation is a most convincing indication that he was not a Gentile." Ref-0186, pp. 18-19n3

Luke - Jewish? : Acts 21:10; Acts 27:9 ☩ Luke writes that Agabus 'came down from Judea' (Acts 21:10). But Caesarea was within the province of Judea in Roman times. However, it was not part of Old Testament Judah. Judea was a Jewish way of specifying Jerusalem and may provide evidence that Luke was a Jew. Ref-0100, Tape 19:A. The remains can still be seen, and thick deposits of calcium carbonate inside the pipes witness plainly to the worth of the water which once flowed through them. The words of Rev. 3:14-15 must have hit home powerfully in Laodicea: the writer said that the church was as useless and distasteful as that bad water." Ref-0063, p. 72.

It also states regarding the 'Sacrament of the Altar' [the Lord's Supper], 'namely, that in the Sacrament forgiveness of sins, life, and salvation are given us through these words.'" Luther - consubstantiation : Mtt. 26:26; Mark 14:22; Luke 22:19; 1Cor. 11:24 ☉ + "Luther's doctrine, generally referred to as the doctrine of consubstantiation, was based upon a literal interpretation of the scriptural accounts of the Last Supper undergirded by a philosophical concept of the ubiquity of Christ. Since Christ is everywhere and in all things, Luther claimed, to deny his presence in the elements is to deny the plain meaning of the words of Christ [This is my body. . .] as well as his ubiquity." "Luther had affirmed a doctrine of the corporeal presence: in 'This is my body,' (1Cor. 11:24), 'is' meant nothing but 'is.' Desiring to stress the priesthood of all Christians, he excluded the priestly miracle of transubstantiation, and adduced instead, to explain the presence, his doctrine of the ubiquity of Christ's resurrected body. To give the body this more than bodily nature, he revived and adapted the patristic concept of the interchange of characteristics (communicatio idiomatum between the body and the spirit." Lysanias : Luke 3:1 ☉ "Another supposed mistake has been detected by some in Luke 3:1, where Lysanias is said to have been tetrarch of Abilene (west of Damascus), in the fifteenth year of Tiberius (AD 27-28), whereas the only Lysanias of Abilene otherwise known from ancient history bore the title of king and was executed by order of Mark Antony in 34 BC. Evidence of a later Lysanias who had the status of tetrarch has, however, been forthcoming from an inscription recording the dedication of a temple 'for the salvation of the Lords Imperial and their whole household, by Nymphaeus, a freedman of Lysanias the tetrarch'. The reference to 'the Lords Imperial' -- a joint title given only to the Emperor Tiberius and his mother Livia, the widow of Augustus -- fixes the date of the inscription between A.D. 14 (the year of Tiberius' accession) and 29 (the year of Livia's death). On the strength of this and other evidence we may well be satisfied with the verdict of the historian Eduard Meyer, that Luke's reference to Lysanias is 'entirely correct.'" Ref-0239, p. 88.

Hittite law explains the reluctance of Abraham to buy the entire parcel, and his preference for acquiring only the cave itself and the territory immediately adjacent. The law required the owner of an entire tract to perform the duties of ilku or feudal service, a responsibility which doubtless included pagan religious observances. . . Abraham was alert enough to prefer avoiding this involvement by purchasing only a fraction of the parcel, thus leaving Ephron responsible to perform ilku as original owner of the tract." magi - time of visitation : Mtt. 2:9-14 ☉ ". . . if Matthew is telling us of a time when Jesus is two years old and living in Nazareth . . . why should God instruct Joseph to flee to Egypt in order to escape Herod? The children were only being slain in the area around Bethlehem. This would hardly seem prudent as in order to reach Egypt from Nazareth they would have to pass through or in close proximity to Herod's domain of Judea. They would be manifestly save where they already were, being about seventy miles north of the slaughter. Indeed, the same reasoning applies to the fact that the wise men returned to their own country "another way" (Mtt. 2:12). Were they in Nazareth such action would have been unnecessary for they would have been well out of harms way by simply returning back up the "fertile crescent" to the "east" as Herod was in Jerusalem (Mtt. 2:3). However, such evasive steps would have been judicious had they have been south of Jerusalem in Bethlehem. . . . Are we actually expected to think that in two years no laymen had carried this story to the Temple and that so ruthless a despot as Herod had no "ears" to hear of his rival's birth -- that he knows nothing of the event which is being told openly and that has occurred under his very nose? The answer is obvious. This constitutes irrefutable proof that the wise men came at Jesus' birth for if two years had elapsed, Herod would surely have already heard of the birth. The priest and scribes did not mention the testimony of the shepherds when Herod inquired of them (Mtt. 2:1,4) because the story had not yet had time to travel the 5 miles to Jerusalem." explained, there are three views on the believer's relationship to indwelling sin. One view is eradicationism, the notion that sin can be entirely done away with. This is biblically unjustifiable and contrary to human experience. Another view is suppressionism, the idea that the believer must war against the remnants of sin without any hope of succeeding in this life. But this too is not the teaching of Scripture. Suppressionism, as Thomas called Warfield's view, has the advantage of being more realistic than eradicationism, but it fails because it is too pessimistic. A third view is counteraction, the belief that believers have responsibilities and that spiritual progress and victories are more than an ideal.⁴⁶ⁿ John D. Hannah, The manger - Jesus born : Luke 2:4-7 ☆ "Popular tradition affirms that the child was born the night the family arrived,. But in 2:4 we are told that Mary and Joseph "went up" to Bethlehem.

The verse assumes their arrival. Then in verse six we are told, "And while they were there, the days were fulfilled for her to be delivered."
Thus the text affirms a time lapse between the arrival in Bethlehem and the birth of Jesus.
Mary "fulfilled her days" in Bethlehem. We can easily assume a few weeks have passed, perhaps even a month or more. Thus, the birth took place in shelter found by Joseph during those weeks. Was Joseph so totally incompetent that he could provide nothing by way of adequate housing after a significant number of days of searching?" Kenneth E.
Bailey, "The Manger and The Inn: The Cultural
Background of Luke 2:7", Ref-0066, 20.4
2007, 99:106, pp. 99-100. "For centuries, large sections of the Church have assumed that the manger was in an animal stable.
Three overlapping questions arise here, which of necessity must be discussed together: 1.
Was the birthplace a cave? 2. Was it a stable or a private home? 3. Was it inside or outside the village. I will try to demonstrate that the place was likely a private home in the village, and may have been a cave." Kenneth E.
Bailey, "The Manger and The Inn: The Cultural
Background of Luke 2:7", Ref-0066, 20.4 2007, 99:106, p. 100. "What then of the manger? The text tells us, "She gave birth to her first son, wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger." The traditional understanding of this verse in the Western world moves along the following path. Jesus was laid in a manger. Mangers are naturally found in animal stables. Ergo, Jesus was born in a stable. However, in the one-room peasant home of Palestine and Lebanon, the manger is built into the floor of the house." Kenneth E. Bailey, "The Manger and The Inn: The Cultural Background of Luke 2:7", Ref-0066, 20.4 2007, 99:106, p.
101. ". . . the very idea of the inn is problematic on many grounds. First, Luke uses pandokheion to designate a commercial inn (cf.
Luke 10:36). This common word for an inn is not found in our text. Second, the only other use of the noun kataluma in the Gospels is in Luke 22:11 (and its parallel passage in Mark 14:14) where it clearly does not mean an inn.
Third, as we have observed, a man returning to his home village insults his family and friends by going to an inn. Fourth, it remains uncertain as to whether Bethlehem would have had a commercial inn. . . . In Luke 2:7
kataluma is best understood as "guest room."
This is clearly what the word means in Luke

22:11 and Mark 14:14. . . . This . . . gives new understanding to the story of Jesus' birth. Joseph and Mary arrive in Bethlehem. They find shelter with a family whose separate guest room is full, and are accommodated among the family in acceptable village style. The birth takes place there on the raised terrace of the family home, and the baby is laid in a manger." Kenneth E. Bailey, "The Manger and The Inn: The Cultural Background of Luke 2:7", Ref-0066, 20.4 2007, 99:106, pp. 103-104.

Ambrosiaster (fourth century), Pacian (392 AD), Ambrose (397 AD), Augustine (430 AD), and Theophylact (1077 AD) all cite Acts 8:37. The natural question posed by textual scholars is this: if the text were genuine, why would any scribe wish to delete it? In his commentary on the book of Acts, Dr. J. A. Alexander provides the possible answer. By the end of the third century it had become common practice to delay the baptism of Christian converts to assure that they had truly understood their commitment to Christ and were not holding to one of the various heretical beliefs prevalent at that time. It is possible that a scribe, believing that baptism should not immediately follow conversion, omitted this passage from the text, which would explain its absence in many of the Greek manuscripts which followed." manuscript - Aleph and Beta - disagreement : Mark 16:9-10 ♣

Regarding what the NIV footnotes refer to as the two most reliable manuscripts, Jay Green observes, ". . . there can scarcely be found there verses in a row which are the same in Aleph and Beta. . . in fact there are more than 3,000 differences between them in the Gospels of the New Testament alone" Ref-0176, p. 2:321. "Another problem with these manuscripts is they both have 'correcting' hands on them. Aleph has several 'correcting' hands on it while Beta has a couple. In other words, later scribes made changes in the manuscripts. Most likely, they were trying to bring them in conformity with other manuscripts they had which they considered to be more reliable. . . despite [its] supposed importance, eventually, Aleph was discarded. It was forgotten for centuries until Constantin von Tischendorf discovered it in the late 1800s and proclaimed it 'the critical standard for establishing the text'" Ref-0177, p. 103. "The New American Standard Bible (1971) puts this paragraph in brackets and has a note reading "Some of the oldest manuscripts omit from verse 9 through 20." The version adds an alternate proposed reading for the end of the book, stating that this reading is found in "a few later manuscripts and version." These notes are misleading. The "Some of the oldest manuscripts" are really just two Greek manuscripts (there is also one much later manuscript). It should be said that the "sacred and imperishable proclamation" (shorter ending of Mark) also has very little to commend its authenticity. The note in the New International Version is more accurate as to number of manuscripts, but highly interpretive: "The two most reliable early manuscripts do not have Mark 16:9-20." Actually, the reliability of Vaticanus and Sinaiticus is strictly a theory, though widely taught. Also, one of these two manuscripts contain space for the missing paragraph, a very unusual thing when using expensive vellum (fine animal skins). Apparently the scribe was aware of the passage but lacked it in his exemplar. The other manuscript shows evidence of having been tampered with to fill up the space. . . . The point that the footnotes in most Bibles fail to report is that 1,400 manuscripts do contain this passage. Further, St. Jerome, when he translated the New Testament into Latin, included Mark 16:9-20. It is significant that he did so in the fourth century, when the dissenting Egyptian manuscripts were also written! Apparently these two copies which lacked this passage were not representative in their own time." Ref-0684, pp. 112-113.

"The Codex Alexandrinus was sent in 1628 as a present to Charles I of England from Cyril Lucar, patriarch of Constantinople. Cyril Lucar, who had formerly been patriarch of Alexandria, brought it with him to Constantinople, and this explains why it is called the Alexandrian Codex. It is written in two columns to a page and contains the Old and New Testaments. It is imperfect in the New Testament having lost Matthew 1:1-25; John 6:50-7:52, and 2 Corinthians 4:13-12:6. It contains, however, the two epistles by Clement of Rome which in it alone have descended to posterity, also an epistle of Athanasius, and a production by Eusebius on the Psalter. On paleographic and other grounds, it is believed to have been written in the middle of the fifth century. The New Testament was edited in 1786 by C. G. Woide and republished with corrections by B. Harris Cowper in an octavo edition issued in 1860." Constantine Tischendorf, "The Various Versions of the Bible", Ref-0788, p. 125.

The same is true of Origin (A.D. 185-254); and Basil the Great (who died A.D. 379), affirmed that those words were wanting in old copies. And this omission accords very well with the encyclical or general character of the epistle. At the present

Sir Isaac Newton determined that, rather than the 390 year span defining the duration of the Judaic Kingdom, it marked the interval from the death of Solomon with the ensuing emergence of the divided kingdoms to the year of Nebuchadnezzar initiated the siege. Sir Robert Anderson also understood the 390 to be taken from the commencement of the final siege, but he judged that those years encompassed the period from that date to the year the prophet Aijjah promised Jeroboam (I) that he would receive ten tribes (1K. 11:29-39). Ussher reasoned similarly except he took the 380 to span from the fall of Jerusalem unto Ahijah's promise to Jeroboam (I). Beecher and Anstey both understood the period to encompass the year Ezekiel began to prophecy (30 years after Josiah's second reform and the great Passover in the 18th year of his dominion, Eze 1:120) unto the "Disruption." Polycarp writes 'which is the mother of us all' and uses the Greek word panton (Philippians 3:3). Where did Polycarp get the phrases if not from the Traditional Text? "The question arises as to why this passage was ever omitted. We find the answer in church history. Augustine makes an astounding statement concerning the authenticity of the passage. After citing the forgiving phrase of Christ, 'Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more,' Augustine writes: This proceeding, however, shocks the minds of some weak believers, or rather unbelievers and enemies of the Christian faith: inasmuch that, after (I suppose) of its giving their wives impunity of sinning, they struck out from their copies of the Gospel this that our Lord did in pardoning the woman taken in adultery: as if He granted leave of sinning, Who said, Go and sin no more! Augustine implies some fearful scribes who thought the inclusion might lead to adultery omitted this passage." The NIV obscures this non sequitur by supplying the word "people" to the text of 8:12. Every Greek text says "them," and if 7:53 were the verse right before it, the "them" would refer to the meeting of Nicodemus and the Sanhedrin. But our Lord was not at that meeting."

Irenaeus wrote Against Heresies. In it he cites from Mark 16:19, establishing that the longer reading was in existence at this time and was considered canonical, at least by Irenaeus: *Also, towards the conclusion of his Gospel, Mark says: 'So then, after the Lord Jesus had spoken to them, He was received up into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God;' confirming what had been spoken by the prophet: 'The LORD said to my Lord, Sit Thou on My right hand, until I make Thy foes Thy footstool.' [Chrysostom preached until 398 AD.] "The oldest witness, which outdates all Greek manuscripts containing Matthew chapter six, is the Didache (otherwise known as the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles). This ancient catechism dates to the early second century, shortly after 100 AD, and contains a form of the Lord's Prayer: 'But let not your fasts be with the hypocrites; for they fast on the second and fifth day of the week; but do ye fast on the fourth day and the preparation (Friday). Neither pray as the hypocrites; but as the Lord commanded in his Gospel, thus pray: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed by Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, as in heaven, so on earth. Give us today our daily (needful) bread, and forgive us our debt as we also forgive our debtors. And bring

[3] The Greek tou pone'rou here can be the genitive of ho ponēros ("the evil one") or of to ponēron ("evil"). The unambiguous form for evil in the abstract would be the genitive of hē ponēria, a feminine noun." Ref-0684, pp. 78, 83. "There is an addition at the end of the prayer in the Didache that is not in our modern critical text since it is not in the earliest Greek manuscripts of Matthew. It is similar to but shorter than the addition familiar to many Christians that is found in the later Byzantine addition to the prayer . . . Though this addition to the prayer in the Didache initially may appear to encourage Byzantine text advocates since it could support an early date for this ending, the truth is just the opposite. The doxological ascription appears later in the Didache in almost the exact same form and is appended to the Eucharistic prayers in 9:2, 3, 4 and 10:2, 4, 5. It is very similar to a common ending to prayers in the Jewish liturgy which exist even today. A better explanation of the manuscript tradition is that the Didache is an early witness to the tendency of scribes to add doxological ascriptions, which increased in Byzantine times when the doxological ascription crystallized and, in the Middle Ages, became part of the received text -- at least in the Byzantine section of the church (Western and Latin texts along with the Alexandrian text-type omit the doxology)." manuscript - names - accuracy of Assyrian : ☪ "This examination has shown how closely the Hebrew writings of Assyrian royal names conform to their contemporary appearances in Assyria and Babylonia in conformity with ancient orthographic custom. . . The distinctively Assyrian forms [in the Old Testament] may be assumed to derive from Hebrew sources set down in writing at or near the times of various episodes, a conclusion reached on other grounds by many commentators who assign the passages in Kings containing them to some official annalistic compilation. Nevertheless, we may remark upon their remaining unchanged by any compiler or editor of Kings or Isaiah during the exile in Babylonia, or later, when the Assyrian forms had become obsolete. . . The remarkably accurate preservation of these

Assyrian names. . . is striking testimony to the care of the ancient Semitic scribe faced with incomprehensible forms. That care is highlighted when the wide range of variation in Greek manuscripts of the Septuagint and the various Hellenistic historians is set out for comparison." In the year last named I was traveling in the East under the patronage of Emperor Alexander II of Russia, and to him it was my good fortune to transfer the manuscript. It contains the Old and New Testaments and is written with four columns to a page. The New Testament is perfect, not having been deprived of a single leave. To the twenty seven books of the New Testament are appended the epistle of Barnabas complete and part of the Shepherd of Hermes, which books, even at the beginning of the fourth century, were reckoned for Holy Scripture by a good many. We are led, by all the data upon which we calculate the antiquity of manuscripts, to assign the Codex Sinaiticus to the middle of the fourth century. . . . It is even not impossible that the Sinaitic Codex . . . formed one of the fifty copies of the Bible which in the year A.D. 331 the Emperor Constantine ordered to be executed for Constantinople under the direction of Eusebius, the Bishop of Cesarea, best known as a church historian. In this case, it must be understood that the Emperor Justinina, the founder of the Sinaitic monastery, sent it as a present from Constantinople to the monks at Sinai. The manuscript was edited by the discoverer in 1862 at the cost of the Russian Emperor Alexander II, in a form as literally exact as it was splendid; the New Testament of the same was reproduced for ordinary use in a cheaper form in 1863 and 1865." manuscript - Textus Receptus - origin : ☪

"When the Dutch scholar Desiderius Erasmus (1469-1536) published the first Greek New Testament in 1516, he had just a few late manuscripts with which to work. Later editions of the Greek Testament were also based on similar manuscripts. So, apart from minor variations, all the early printed editions are essentially the same. The Greek New Testaments used by the King James translators other than Erasmus' texts included the Complutensian Polyglot printed in 1514 (but not published till 1520), Stephanus' texts, and Beza's texts. The editions of Beza, particularly that of 1598, and the two last editions of Stevens were the chief sources used for the English Authorized Version of 1611. The Elzivir brothers of the Netherlands published several editions of the Greek New Testament with essentially the same text as that of Erasmus, Beza, and Stephanus. In the Latin introduction to the 1633 edition, Elzivir stated that this text was the ?textub ab omnibus receptum (?text received by all). This was shortened to ?Textus Receptus, and was later applied to Stephanus' text of 1550. This name was also applied in a general way to all texts of the Byzantine type. The traditional Greek text has been called the Textus Receptus ever since that time." Ref-0177, p. 134 citing Farstad, Arthur L. The New King James Version in the Great Tradition (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson, 1993), pp. 106-7. "By now the Greek text to many people had become standardized. The editions of a Dutch family of printers, the Elzevirs, confirmed this general view. Their 1633 edition assures the reader, "You have the text now received by all." Originally, this statement was printed in Latin, from which comes the expression "Textus Receptus" or "Received Text." Yet this edition was scarcely different from the Stephanus text, which was about the same as the text of Erasmus -- a text based on no more than a handful of late Greek manuscripts. As more and earlier manuscripts came to light, it was inevitable for demands to be made for an improved Greek text." Ref-0236, p. 108.

We begin by presenting a table on the first eight verses of [Romans] chapter 1. . . . These nine or ten different 'readings' are actually of no importance; besides, they have to do with only one or two manuscripts out of the 150 consulted on this passage. . . . The differences between our various translations are much more numerous and ordinarily have more influence on the sense." Ref-0060, p. 195. "The number of manuscripts of the New Testament, of early translations from it, and of quotations from it in the oldest writers of the Church, is so large that it is practically certain that the true reading of every doubtful passage is preserved in some one or other of these ancient authorities. This can be said of no other ancient book in the world." Ref-0075, p. 355, quoting Sir Frederic Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts, pp. 98-102 ". . . a careful study of the variants. . . of the various earliest manuscripts reveals that none of them affects a single doctrine of Scripture. The system of spiritual truth contained in the standard Hebrew text of the Old Testament is not the slightest altered or compromised by any of the variant readings found in the Hebrew manuscripts of earlier date found in the Dead Sea caves or anywhere else. All that is needed to verify this is to check the register of the well-attested variants in Rudolf Kittel's edition of the Hebrew Bible or else the more recent Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia. It is every evident that the vast majority of them are so inconsequential as to leave the meaning of each clause doctrinally unaffected." Ref-0001, p. 28. Dr. Harold Hohner "There are approximately 300,000 textual variants among New Testament manuscripts. The Majority Text differs from the Textus Receptus in almost 2,000 places. So the agreement is better than 99 percent. But the Majority Text differs from the modern critical text in only about 6,500 places. In other words the two texts agree almost 98 percent of the time. Not only that, but the vast majority of these differences are so minor that they neither show up in translation nor affect exegesis. Consequently the majority text and modern critical texts are very much alike, in both quality and quantity." Wallace, Daniel B. "The Majority Text and the Original Text: Are They Identical?" Ref-0200, April-June 1991, pp. 157-158. "A few New Testament passages may serve as illustrations. In Romans 5:1, is it "let us have peace with God" or "we have peace with God"? The difference is simply whether the o in Greek is long or short (echōmen or echomen). In 1 Thessalonians 2:7, is it "we were babes among you" or "we were gentle among you"? The difference is one letter (nepioi or epioi). In 1 John 1:4, is it "that your joy may be full" or "that our joy may be full"? The difference between "you" (hymōn) and "our" (hēmōn) is one letter and the two words sound alike. In Revelation 1:5, is it "washed us from our sins" or "freed us from our sins"? The difference is one letter and the words sound the same (lousanti or lusanti). It is not difficult to see how these scribal mistakes could take place. Generally, if they are important enough, our recent translations will footnote such differences to ensure the reader is well informed." Ref-0236, p. 89. "The variant readings about which any doubt remains among textual critics of the New Testament affect no material question of historic fact or of Christian faith and practice. To sum up, we may quote the verdict of the late Sir Frederic Kenyon, a scholar whose authority to make pronouncements on ancient MSS was second to none: "The interval then between the dates of original composition and the earliest extant evidence becomes so small as to be in fact negligible, and the last foundation for any doubt that the Scriptures have come down to us substantially as they were written has no been removed. Both the authenticity and the general integrity of the books of the New Testament may be regarded as finally established." Ref-0239, pp. 14-15.

manuscript - variations in Old Testament :

☉ "The famous B. Kennicott based his critical edition of the Hebrew Bible on the study of 581 manuscripts. Professor Rossi examined about 680. J. J. Michaelis spent thirty years of his life making a similar study. Professor R. D. Wilson declared that in the texts studied by Kennicott there are about 280 million letters. Of this total, there are about 900,000 variants, of which 750,000 are nothing but insignificant changes of v and i. Taking the largest figure, one arrives at one variant for 316 letters. Laying aside the unimportant changes of v and of i, one finds only one variant for 1,580 letters. Add to this the fact that the most of the variants are found in only a few manuscripts or even in just one. Very few variants occur in more than one of the 200-400 manuscripts of each book of the Old Testament." Ref-0060, p. 190.

manuscript - Vatican Codex : Heb. 9:14 ☉

"[F]rom the fourth century, is in the Library of the Vatican. One hundred forty-two of the 559 pages contain almost the whole New Testament." Ref-0060, p. 191. "Vaticanus is missing Genesis 1:1-46:28; 2 Kings 2:5-7, 10-13; Psalm 106:27-138:6; Mark 16:9-20; John 7:53-8:11; and everything after Hebrews 9:14." Ref-0086, p. 36. "The Codex Vaticanus came first into the possession of learned Europe. From what place it came into the Vatican Library is not known, but it is entered in the very first catalogue of the collection dating from 1475. It contains the Old and New Testaments. Of the New it at present contains the four Gospels, the Acts the seven General Epistles, nine of St. Paul's Epistles, and that to the Hebrews as far as Hebrews 9:14; but all that followed this place is lost, namely, the last chapters of the Hebrews, the two epistles to Timothy, the epistles to Titus and Philemon, and the Revelation. The text is written in three columns to a page. The peculiarity of the handwriting, the arrangement of the manuscript, and the character of the text itself, more especially certain remarkable readings, induce the opinion that the codex is to be referred to the fourth century and probably to about the middle of that century. During a long period the Roman Court very seldom granted access to the manuscript for any critical use of it, but in the year 1828, by the command of Pope Leo XII, the late Cardinal Angelo Mai undertook an edition of it. His edition first appeared in 1857, three years after his death, and was found to be full of mistakes. The writer of the present introduction corrected Mai's New Testament in several hundreds of passages in his Novum Testamentum Vaticanum published in 1867. Still further corrections are supplied in the facsimile edition of 1868 by Vercellone and Cozza (inserted also in the Appendix Novi

☉ "Perhaps we can appreciate how wealthy the New Testament is in manuscript attestation if we compare the textual material for other ancient historical works. For Caesar's Gaulic War (composed between 58 and 50 BC) there are several extant MSS, but only nine or ten are good, and the oldest is some 900 years later than Caesar's day. Of the 142 books of the Roman History of Livy (59 BC-AD 17) only thirty-five survive; these are known to us from not more than twenty MSS of any consequence, only one of which, and that containing fragments of Books iii-vi, is as old as the fourth century. Of the fourteen books of the Histories of Tacitus (c. A.D. 100) only four and a half survive; of the sixteen books of his Annals, ten survive in full and two in part. The text of these extant portions of his two great historical works depends entirely on two MSS, one of the ninth century and one of the eleventh. The extant MSS of his minor works (Dialogus de Oratoribus, Agricola, Germania) all descend from a codex of tenth century. The History of Thucydides (c. 460-400 BC) is known to us from eight MSS, the earliest belonging to C. A.D. 900, and a few papyrus scraps, belonging to about the beginning of the Christian era. The same is true of the History of Herodotus (c. 488-428 BC). Yet no classical scholar would listen to an argument that the authenticity of Herodotus or Thucydides is in doubt because the earliest MSS of their works which are of use to us are over 1,300 years later than the originals. But how different is the situation of the New Testament in this respect!" Ref-0239, p. 11.

manuscript - witness - number of : ☉

"The critics. . . propose a rule that number is less important than weight. A dozen or a hundred manuscripts all copied from a single original ancestor count only as one; and therefore a lone manuscript of a different type equals the other hundred in weight. This argument, which seems so plausible at first, is not so weighty a criterion as the critics seem to believe. There is another factor involved, which, if they have mentioned it, I have missed the mention. It is this. If a score or two score manuscripts have a single ancestor, it implies that a score or two score copyists believed that ancestor to be faithful to the autographs. But if a manuscript has not a numerous progeny. . . one may suspect that the early scribes doubted its value." Ref-0154, p. 15. "The evidence for our New Testament writings is ever so much greater than the evidence for many writings of classical authors, the authenticity of which no one dreams of questioning. And if the New Testament were a collection of secular writings, their authenticity would generally be regarded as beyond all doubt. It is a curious fact that historians have often been much readier to trust the New Testament records than have many theologians." Ref-0239, p. 10.

☉ + "The most important documents for recovering the original wording of the New Testament are the Greek manuscripts. These are a total of 5745 manuscripts (to date), divided into four classes according to the materials from which they are made or their particular style of writing. (The number after the name of the class is the number of copies that presently exist.) | 1. Papyri (118). Manuscripts written in the second to sixth centuries A.D. on paper made from the papyrus plant into scrolls and written on with ink. | 2. Uncials (317). Manuscripts written in the fourth to tenth centuries A.D. in large elegant "capital" letters that are disconnected from one another, although the words were not separated and no punctuation was used. These were written on parchment (sheepskins or goatskins) or vellum (treated calfskin) with ink. | 3. Miniscules (2877). Manuscripts written in the ninth to sixteenth centuries A.D. in smaller cursive script, in which the letters are connected to one another (written with a running hand). | 4. Lectionaries (2433). Manuscripts in which the books of the New Testament are arranged for daily study and meditation, and not according to the canonical order. | The earliest manuscripts are those written on papyrus. These are the most significant for the early history and restoration of the original text. The earliest of these is a fragment of John 18 known as Papyrus 52 (P⁵²) that dates to about A.D. 125. There is also a collection of five papyri manuscripts from Oxford University that brings the number of the earliest manuscripts (early as second century AD) to 15. Several of the important early manuscripts dating to around A.D. 200 contain portions to the Gospels and the epistles: | * One group is enumerated as P³² (Titus), P^{64,67} (Matthew 3; 5; 26), P⁴⁶ (Romans 5ff.; Hebrews, 1 and 2 Corinthians, Ephesians, Galatians, Philippians, Colossians, 1 Thessalonians), P⁶⁶ (John), and P⁷⁵ (most of Luke and more than half of John). | * The bodmer Papyri (P^{66,72,74,75}), dated c. A.D. 175-200, contain portions of John, Acts, 1-3 John, and the oldest copies of Jude and 1 and 2 Peter." Ref-0818, pp. 77-79.

"The oldest known MSS. of the New Testament were written more than two and a half centuries after the original autographs, and so widely do these MSS. differ in spelling that we may be sure that the copyists were least faithful at this point. In this matter the papyri offer us but little aid, as they, too, present a chaos of variations. But these differences in spelling really have little weight in exegesis." Ref-0957, p. 22.

manuscripts - Masoretic Text : 2S. 23:1 ☉

"The most important surviving manuscripts of the Masoretic Text all come from the ben Asher family. The earliest, providing our best examples of the Masoretic Tradition are: 1) Codex Cairensis (AD 895), containing only the Former and Latter Prophets; 2) Aleppo Codex (AD 930), once a complete copy, but one-fourth destroyed in a fire; 3) Oriental 4445 (AD 950, 1540), containing most of the Pentateuch (Genesis 39:20-Deuteronomy 1:33); 4) Codex Leningradensis, or Leningrad B19a (AD 1008-1009), a complete text of the Old Testament that served as the source for the most current critical editions of the Hebrew text: Biblia Hebraica, ed. Rudolf Kittel (1973), and Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia, eds. Kark Ellinger and Wilhelm Stuttgart (1984); 5) Leningrad (Petersburg) Codex of the Prophets (AD 916), containing only the Latter Prophets; 6) Damascus Pentateuch (late ninth or tenth century AD), containing most of the Pentateuch; 7) Codex Reuchlinianus of the Prophets (AD 1105), containing an editorial revision of the ben Naphtali text; 8) Erfurtensis Codex (AD 1000-1300), consisting of three manuscripts, all containing the entire Old Testament." Ref-0818, pp. 59-60. "The consonantal text which is the basis of the Masoretic text . . . attained ascendancy over other Hebrew textual traditions during the Second Temple period and became authoritative by the second century C.E. (perhaps so designated by the synod of Jabneh). Because of this dominance, [the MT] is represented by a very large number of manuscripts. Since this established consonantal text consistently served as the basis for the Masoretes' work, it has come to be called "Proto-Masoretic" and even, occasionally, and anachronistically, the "Masoretic Text." The Masoretes worked to maintain this received text tradition as faithfully as possible. At times the text tradition contained some irregularities or peculiar features. These were transmitted with utmost fidelity, just like the rest of the textual tradition. In some cases it seems they transmitted things which they did not understand fully." Ref-0842, p. 31. "Sailhamer's understanding of messianic prophecy has to significant elements. First, he asserts that the Masoretic Text should be viewed not as the original Hebrew text but as its final stage. As such, the Masoretic Text is a consolidation of the Hebrew text and reflects postbiblical interpretation of texts that are messianic in other ancient versions. Hence, the first task of the interpreter of the Hebrew Bible, particularly in messianic passages, is to establish the text through textual criticism. Second, Sailhamer builds on the well-established fact that the medieval Jewish "peshat" (simple) interpretations of the text were designed as an answer to the Christian messianic interpretation of the Tanak. Through the rise and influence of Christian Hebraism, Jewish non-messianic interpretations slipped into the Protestant understanding of the Old Testament. As a result, Protestant interpretation either denied messianic prophecy altogether or adopted alternative interpretations, such as dual, typological, and progressive fulfillment." Ref-1272, p. 25. ". . . the Masoretic Text is frequently treated as a received text rather than a version of the biblical text. Yet the Masoretic Text, although generally sound and truly the best Old Testament text available, is a somewhat late version of the Hebrew Bible. Therefore, other versions, such as the Samaritan Pentateuch, and ancient translations, such as the Septuagint, should be consulted to determine the best possible readings of the Old Testament." Ref-1272, p. 34. "Second Samuel 23:1 provides another example of the Masoretic Text exhibiting a historical reading rather than the more messianic variant reading of the versions. . . . In the Masoretic Text, the passage contains five synonymous identifications of the author of these words. They come from David, who is the son of Jesse, who is "the man raised on high," who is "anointed by the God of Jacob," who is "the favorite singer [lit. "the delightful one of the songs"] of Israel." This translation and interpretation hinges on the Masoretic Text reading 'al, "on high." However, the Septuagint translates epi ("concerning"), apparently reading the same Hebrew consonants but a different Hebrew vowel: pathah (yielding 'al) rather than qamas (yielding 'al). This slight vowel difference results in a substantial difference in translation: These are the last words of David: the declaration of David son of Jesse, and the declaration of the man raised up concerning the Messiah [Anointed One] of the God of Jacob, and the Delightful One of the songs of Israel. Sailhamer aptly explains the significance of the different readings when he writes, "The effect of the difference in the length of the vowel is such that the title 'anointed one' is the Masoretic Text refers to King David, whereas in other, non-Masoretic versions of the text, David's words are taken as a reference to the Messiah (cf. 2 Sa 22:51)." The internal evidence is against the interpretation that David was writing about himself. In 2 Sam 23:3-4, David proceeds to describe the righteous reign of the king as "the one who rules the people with justice (2 Sam 23:3-4). In v. 5 David makes a declarative statement (lit.): "For not so is my house with God" . . . (2 Sam. 23:5). Most translations recognize the internal contradiction. In v. 1 David seems to be saying it is all about him, and then in v. 5 he plainly states it is not. Therefore, most English versions translate v. 5 as a question to avoid this internal contradiction with the first verse in the paragraph . . . However, the problem with taking 2 Sam. 23:5 as a question is that there is no interrogative particle (prefixed h), the Hebrew form normally found in yes/no questions. Hence, it is unlikely that the phrase should be understood as a question." Ref-1272, pp. 39-41.

manuscripts - Patristic citations : ☩ + "The final category of textual evidence is drawn from citations of the New Testament in the sermons, commentaries, and correspondence of the church Fathers (known as Patristic literature). This material dates as early as the first century A.D. and as late as the thirteenth century, and the number of citations exceed one million. These are useful because for the most part they are datable and provide information of their provenance (geographical location, which is important in understanding textual families . . .). Further, sometimes a church Father wrote concerning a disputed reading in a text and thus provides valuable information about the variants as they existed in the texts of his time." Ref-0818, p. 83. "John H. Sailhamer clarifies the way interpreters should view the Masoretic Text by warning, "Evangelicals, in the desire to stress the verbal inspiration of the OT text, should be careful not to identify the 'original' Hebrew text with the MT." Eminent textual criticism scholar Emmanuel Tov concurs, writing that "the Masoretic Text does not reflect the 'original text' of the biblical books in many details." . . . The Masoretic Text reflects a consonantal text that was not clearly consolidated until the second century AD. Furthermore, the pointings and accents were not recorded until the ninth and tenth centuries AD. . . . Although the Masoretic Text seeks to identify the original intent of the biblical autographs in a consistent fashion, and often does, it also has an interpretive tradition embedded in it. As Jewish scribes, the Masoretes faithfully transmitted the textual traditions that they had received . . . from rabbinic Judaism. Thus, there is significant rabbinic theology embedded in the Masoretic Text's standardization of the consonantal text and its addition of accents and vowels. . . . As such, it reflects the theological perspective of post-Christian, rabbinic Judaism. Thus, there are several significant examples of the Masoretic Text interpreting Old Testament messianic texts in a distinctly nonmessianic . . . fashion." Ref-1272, pp. 35-36.

manuscripts - rewritten? : ☩ + "John Van Seters, though himself a historical critic, has challenged the notion of "editors" and "editions," especially of the scribes and their work in this capacity: I have concluded from this study that there never was in antiquity anything like "editions" of literary works that were the result of an "editorial" process, the work of editors or redactors. It is a figment of scholarly imagination that had its origins in an anachronistic analogy based on the supposition that the scribes and scholars of antiquity were engaged in the same kind of activity that occupied European scholars of the Renaissance. . . . Consequently, all talk of "redactors" and "redactions" should be scrupulously avoided in biblical studies. . . . [Bible critics] have populated their imaginary biblical world with myriads of text-corrupting editors, who virtually replace the actual authors of the text. These editors are given great religious authority to shape the text as they wish until the form of the text is declared canonical. It is time to rid biblical scholarship of this great fantasy and to attempt to reconstruct historically the development of the biblical text as the basis of its interpretation and exegesis." Ref-0818, p. 95.

Its text was erased in the twelfth century and written over with a sermon (about 50 of the New Testament manuscripts are palimpsests). It originally contained a complete Old Testament, but now has only portions of Proverbs-Song of Solomon, Job, and part of the Apocrypha; 8) The Amherst Collection fragment (early fourth century AD), containing Genesis 1:1-15." Mark - gospel - priority : ☺ “This ‘Markan hypothesis’, as it is called, was adumbrated in the eighteenth century, but was first set on a stable basis by Carl Lachmann in 1835, when he showed that the common order of the three Synoptists is the order of Mark, since Mark and Matthew sometimes agree in order against Luke, and Mark and Luke still more frequently against Matthew, while Matthew and Luke never agree in order against Mark. Mark thus seems in this respect to be the norm from which the other two occasionally deviate. To this must be added the fact that most of the Markan subject-matter reappears in Matthew and Luke, with a considerable part of the actual language of Mark preserved, and that on grounds of literary criticism the differences in the presentation of common material between Mark on the one hand and Matthew and Luke on the other seem to be more easily accounted for by the priority of Mark than by the priority of Matthew or Luke. But while the Markan hypothesis is still the regnant hypothesis, it has been assailed by writers of great scholarship and ability.” Ref-0239, pp. 30-31.

marriage - obsolete - cultural views : ☩ + “About 29 percent of children under 18 now live with a parent or parents who are unwed or no longer married, a fivefold increase from 1960, according to the Pew report being released Thursday. Broken down further, about 15 percent have parents who are divorced or separated and 14 percent who were never married. Within those two groups, a sizable chunk - 6 percent - have parents who are live-in couples who opted to raise kids together without getting married. Indeed, about 39 percent of Americans said marriage was becoming obsolete. And that sentiment follows U.S. census data released in September that showed marriages hit an all-time low of 52 percent for adults 18 and over. In 1978, just 28 percent believed marriage was becoming obsolete. When asked what constitutes a family, the vast majority of Americans agree that a married couple, with or without children, fits that description. But four of five surveyed pointed also to an unmarried, opposite-sex couple with children or a single parent. Three of 5 people said a same-sex couple with children was a family.” Hope Yen, No love, no marriage? 4 in 10 say marriage becoming obsolete, [<http://www.komonews.com/news/national/108862879.html>] accessed 20101201.

marriage - unbelievers - pastor : ☩ + “Pastors are stewards of a biblical understanding of sexuality. Marrying cohabiters miscommunicates the teaching function of marriage. I would only marry couples that were repentant, had forsaken the sin of cohabitating, and sought the remedy of marriage. Marriage does not simply validate the long-term commitment of a couple whose relationship has been based upon cohabitation. There’s another problem, which has to do with the fact that pastors are not the only stewards of marriage. In other words, marriage is accessible to persons outside the church. So when the church allows a marriage to take place within its life, it should be validating this in a way that goes beyond marriage as a creation institution and gets to what marriage is teaching in the ceremony of the church and the church’s stewardship of marriage.” Albert Mohler, Should Pastors Perform Marriages for Cohabiting Couples?, [<http://www.albertmohler.com/2011/10/07/should-pastors-perform-marriages-for-cohabitating-couples/>] accessed 20111011.

"From Solomon was descended Joseph, the legal 'father' of the Lord Jesus (Mtt. 1:6,16); from Nathan, the virgin Mary, His actual mother (Luke 3:23,31). Taken strictly Christ thus descends not from the chief royal line of Solomon, but from the non-reigning collateral line of Nathan. The one is the legal, the other the organic; the organic has more significance than the legal. Mary - identity in Protestant, Roman, Orthodox, and Muslim faiths differs : ☩

They numbered the verses, words, and letters of each book. They counted the number of times each letter was used in each book. They noted verses that contained all the letters of the alphabet, or a certain number of them. They calculated the middle letter, the middle word, and the middle verse of the Pentateuch; the middle verse of Psalms, the middle verse of the entire Hebrew Bible, and so forth. In fact, they counted almost everything that could be counted. With these safeguards, and others, when a scribe finished making a copy of a book, he could then check the accuracy of his work before using it." Ref-0236, p. 132.

Masoretic - meaning of : ☩ "Masoretic comes from the Hebrew word masora, referring to the marginal notes added by Jewish scribes and scholars of the Middle Ages (known as the Masorettes)." Ref-0086, p. 113. "It was the function of the Massorah -- the Hebrew term for tradition -- to guard the text. (The term is also spelled Masorah, the different spelling depending on varying opinions about the origin of the word.) And the scribes who transmitted the text, on the basis of their authoritative traditions, are generally known as the Massorettes." Ref-0236, p. 131. "These copies are referred to as the Masoretic Text, from the Hebrew word masorah, meaning "tradition." Jewish scribes from Tiberias, called Masorettes, meticulously sought to standardize the Hebrew text and pronunciation; their work is still considered authoritative today." Peter Colon, The Dead Sea Scrolls' True Treasure, Ref-0057, January/February 2006, p. 29. "Masorettes (ca a.d. 500-1000) In the course of the centuries following the stabilization of the text, the scholars who busied themselves with the preservation of the sacred writings eventually came to be known as the ba'al? hammasor?, the "masters [or scholars] of the Masorah" or, as noted above, the Masorettes. The term masorah (also spelled massorah) has been variously explained, but most commonly it has been derived from the postbiblical root msr, "to hand down." According to this derivation the phrase "masters of the Masorah" aptly describes the Masorettes as those who handed down the tradition of the sacred text that they had received from previous generations. With centers in the East (Babylon) and the West (Tiberias) the Masorettes labored hard to preserve the consonantal text and to develop a vocalization system, a cantillation system, and a body of the textual notes, itself called the Masorah." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 p. 4:806. "Some scholars have traced the word "massorah" to the root מָסַר which means "to bind" and which suggests that the masora is a sort of fence which protects the scripture. Others trace the word to the root מָסַר which means "to hand down." In this view, the term means "tradition."

The reader needs to be aware, however, that the term "contra textum" is nowhere discussed in BHS, and the conclusions above are based solely on the observations of the authors." Ref-0842, p. 55.

These are the only marks, with one exception, that are permitted in the official synagogue scrolls. In spite of their antiquity, or perhaps because of it, the meaning of these points is uncertain. Normally they are thought to reflect some doubt on the part of the scribes with respect to the words or letters in question. That many words in the DSS MSS are marked with similar dots suggest their use as an ancient text-critical symbol (cf. the Prolegomenon by S. Talmon to the 1969 repr of R. Butin, Ten Nequodoth of the Torah [1906], pp. xix--xxvii)." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 p. 4:806-807. "Yeiven grouped the proposed explanations for the extraordinary points into three categories. 1) The dots indicate that the letters should be erased. Dots were used for this purpose in various early codices and in the Dead Sea Scrolls. 2) The dots indicate some doubt about the textual tradition for these words. 3) The dots relate to midrashic commentary and indicate nothing about the certainty of the text tradition. They were intended to emphasize a special interpretation of the word. We should add a fourth explanation which is commonly found in the literature: these word were dotted because of doctrinal reservations." Ref-0842, p. 33.

Masoretic Text - inverted nun : Num. 10:35; Ps. 107:23-28 ☉ + "Inverted Nuns What appears to be an inverted form of the letter nun occurs nine times in the body of the MT: before and after Nu. 10:35f, and seven times in Ps. 107:23-28 (21-26 in Codex Leningradensis),⁴⁰. Again the significance of this symbol is disputed, though in Numbers it may refer to the transposition or misplacement of the verses in question." S. K. Soderlund, TEXT AND MSS OF THE NT, Ref-0385 p. 4:807. "We did the [upside down nun] sign develop out of this diverse history and

Some large letters begin the first word of a book (Genesis, Proverbs, Chronicles); others are found in Lev. 11:42 and 13:33 indicating respectively the middle letter and middle word of the Torah; two are found on the first and last words of the Shema in Dt. 6:4. For many of the others (e.g., Gen. 30:42; Nu. 13:30; 27:5; Dt. 29:27) no obvious reason is apparent, though the rabbis did not hesitate to speculate on the reasons with great imagination. The Masorah mentions three cases of a small nun in Isa. 44:14; Jer. 39:13; and Prov. 16:28. Other small letters are found in Gen. 2:4; 27:46; Lev. 1:1; Dt. 32:18. One of these emendations removes an irreverent expression concerning Moses (Nu. 12:12). . . . A good example of the Tiqqune Sopherim occurs in Gen. 18:22. The text states that "Abraham stood before Yahweh." The list of emendations tells us that the text originally stated that "Yahweh stood before Abraham." Since the idiom of "standing before" somebody may also imply service before that person or homage, thus denoting a state of inferiority, this statement was deemed irreverent when applied to God. The word order was changed to have Abraham standing before Yahweh. The Tiqqune Sopherim preserves the original text and thought of the verse. . . . Some Masoretic manuscripts flag all of the Tiqqune Sopherim [emendations of scribes], while others note only some of them. Some manuscripts, like the Aleppo Codex (A), do not mention the Tiqqune Sopherim at all. Likewise, the Tiqqune Sopherim are not noted in the Mp of BHS (or that of BHK). The text-critical apparatus of BHS mentions some of the Tiqqune Sopherim, using the signal tiq soph; however, some are conspicuously absent. The following list gives the location of all eighteen passages (in BHS order), indicating whether or not the passage is mentioned in the textual apparatus of BHS. Ginsberg (Introduction to the Massoretico-Critical Edition of the Hebrew Bible) gives a detailed discussion of each of these, and the specific page numbers in Ginsburg are noted below where BHS has omitted a reference: Gen. 18:22; Num. 11:15; 12:12; 1S. 3:13; 2S. 16:12 (omitted; Ginsburg, p. 355); 2S. 20:1 (omitted; Ginsburg, p. 355-56); 1K. 12:16 (omitted; Ginsburg, p. 355-56); Jer. 2:11; Eze. 8:17; Hos. 4:7; Hab. 1:12; Zec. 2:12; Mal. 1:13; Job 7:20; 32:3; Lam. 3:20; 2Chr. 10:16 (omitted; Ginsburg, p. 355-56)." The ך issue is mentioned in the critical apparatus for each passage, but nothing is mentioned about the passages composing the Itture Sopherim." Ref-0842, p. 40.

Masoretic Text - Septuagint - differences : Septuagint - Hebrew - differences ✧

Masoretic Text - Septuagint - priority given to LXX : ☉ + "In order to evaluate properly the value of LXX as a translation, it is necessary first of all to ensure that the Greek text in use is as close as possible to the original. The process by which this is achieved is not well known nor often discussed, and so the end products of the GÄttlingen Septuaginta-Unternehmen are mistakenly referred to as eclectic texts. The choice of the word eclectic, while appropriate for some kinds of literature, is misleading and to some degree pejorative in LXX criticism because it suggests that "bits and pieces" from "pure" mss are blended to create a product, the sum of which is less desirable than its parts. In point of fact, as any one who has worked with LXX mss will attest, and as Lagarde himself pointed out long ago, all extant LXX mss (including the great uncials) are corrupt, in view of the complicated history of LXX. (Equally corrupt, for that matter, is the so-called MT. . . . When a NT writer allegedly urged his audience to consider that all scripture given by divine "inspiration" is also profitable for doctrine, it was to the LXX not the Hebrew that attention was being called." Ref-0379, pp. 5:1100,1102. "But this process of retroversion has its own hazards and must be used with extreme caution. Three problem areas may be cited. There is first the question whether the extant Greek text accurately represents what the Greek translators wrote. In this field LXX scholarship has made significant strides; yet many unresolved inner-Greek textual problems remain. Second, there is the question of the type of translation ? literal, idiomatic, paraphrastic, midrashic. Confidence in the restored Hebrew text depends upon how literally a given person translated, and this judgment can be made only on the basis of intimate acquaintance with the translator's overall style. Finally, there is the possibility that the translator may have misunderstood the passage or tried to smooth out a difficult reading; in these cases his translation has almost no value for the elucidation of the MT. When to these considerations is added the complication that the extant LXX consists of compositions differing greatly in quality, it may be appreciated that the restoration of the Hebrew text directly from the LXX is at best a risky business (cf. M. H. Goshen-Gottstein, Textus, 3 [1963], 130-158). This precaution is ignored in much of the discussion on the subject (note esp the misuse of the LXX in the critical notes of BH)." S. K. Soderlund, Ref-0008, p. 4:401. "It used to be said that the LXX is important as a text-critical tool because it represents a Hebrew text nearly a millennium older than the earliest extant Hebrew MSS, which are medieval. Since the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls (2nd cent b.c.?1st cent a.d.) this is no longer true, at least for portions of the OT. But far from undermining interest in the LXX, the DSS have intensified it, especially since a number of their readings support the LXX against the MT. Thus many of the discrepancies between the Hebrew and Greek texts of certain books (e.g., Samuel and Jeremiah), previously blamed on the translators, actually go back to a Hebrew text (Vorlage) different from, and sometimes superior to, the MT." S. K. Soderlund, Ref-0008, p. 4:401. "As is well known, the church fathers ? apart from Jerome ? considered the LXX as inspired as the Hebrew (cf. Irenaeus Advhaer iii.21.3f; Augustine Ep. 71.3-6, to Jerome)." S. K. Soderlund, Ref-0008, p. 4:401. "Psalm 72:5 is another example of a significant difference between the Masoretic Text and the Septuagint. The Masoretic Text reads, "They will" [or "May they"] fear you while the sun endures, and as long as the moon throughout all generations." On the other hand, the Septuagint reads, "May he continue while the sun endures, and as long as the moon, throughout all generations." The difference in the two versions is in the Masoretic Text yirā' ūkā, "they will [may they] fear you," versus the Septuagintal reading kai sumparamenei which is a translation of the Hebrew wēya' ārik, "and he will continue/endure.""Ref-1272, p. 41.

Masoretic Text - Septuagint - priority given to MT : ☉ + "Origen, who organized his Hexapla a century later, included work attributed to Theodotion in his sixth column. In certain books, such as Exodus, Joshua, and Job, this sixth-column material may securely be identified with the Theodotionic recension. In such books, and especially in Job, Origen regularly drew on Theodotion to "correct" the then current Greek to reflect more accurately the Hebrew text Origen held in highest esteem." Leonard Greenspoon, Theodotion, Theodotion's Version, Ref-0379, 6:447-448, p. 6:447. "Even though there are many direct quotations from the LXX (complete, partials, adaptations), I would still consider the MT as the superior text. The historical evidence of MT preservation vs. LXX recensions seems significant. Outside Palestine, the LXX was the dominant text, and therefore, the quotations would be necessary for those individuals/groups (depending on the contextual focus or intended audience) who had that only witness for the Word of God. For example Matthew prefers using MT more often for his Jewish-Christian audience than the LXX. In regard to Inspiration and Inerrancy, I would consider (in agreement with others) the quotation from an external source as stating an "inspired truth" in that NT context. It does not indicate that the external source in its entirety is inspired or inerrant, only the specific text quoted by the author as directed by the Holy Spirit." John Baze, private correspondence, Oct. 13, 2008.

Matthew - commentaries : ☉ + "Here are my personal picks for the most profitable commentaries on Matthew. I favor a modified Dispensational approach to the book which takes seriously the way Matthew provides lines of continuity and discontinuity with the Old Testament. But I have little problem with including studies which do not handle eschatological issues as satisfactorily as I would like. There is, after all, more to Matthew than eschatology: 1. Donald A. Hagner (WBC) ? This was a hard choice as I don't hold to 'Q'. But there is so much great exegetical, historical, and practical material in these two volumes that I cannot think of being without it. Eat the meat and spit out the critical bones! 2. D. A. Carson (EBC) ? I rarely find Carson as helpful or as clear as Hagner, but this is a first-rate work. More tentative on 'Q's' influence than Hagner though. The revised work in this set is sure to keep Carson at or near the top of everyone's list. 3. R. C. H. Lenski ? Scoff if you must, but then get over it! It teems with solid exegesis and outstanding preaching values. 4. Edward Glasscock (Moody) ? A terrific dispensational commentary which rejects Markan priority and seeks to explain the transitions between pericopes logically. The most accurate overall interpretation of Matthew. 5. R. T. France (NICNT) ? Superbly written, with great exegesis. Strong on 'Q' but as evangelical as Hagner. Awful on the Olivet Discourse. 6. Craig Blomberg (NAC) ? Rather slim, but thanks to the author's style and learning most worthwhile. 7. John Nolland (NIGTC) ? Asks many great exegetical questions and keeps important emphases before the reader. Pleading to read despite being technical. 8. William Hendriksen (NTC) ? Very Reformed but solid study which emphasizes the geography of the narrative. 9. Leon Morris (Pillar) ? A substantial contribution by a reliable scholar. Not as good as his John commentary but still very helpful. 10. Stewart Custer ? I haven't seen this book, but am including it because Custer is a good exegete, is well read, very conservative, and dispensational. It is bound to be good, if, perhaps, a tad narrow. I have allowed my bias to give Custer the edge over David Turner's BECNT contribution. I can hear the cries now. Where is Davies and Allison? It's not there because they don't actually explain the meaning of the Gospel well. Well, what about Turner? What I've read of it looks good, but I wasn't transfixed. Keener might have made the list too. Especially if one wishes for rich background material along with exegesis. But I prefer Nolland. Mounce (NIBC) is a good treatment once you get over the 'Q' stuff. He is a little better than Michael Green's work (BST), but not as pastoral. Toussaint is thematic but not detailed enough. Walvoord is worthwhile but basic. Ditto Gaebelein, English, and Campbell Morgan. David Hill (NCB) is good but the critical scholarship is dated. Older commentaries are not that distinguished, though Broadus, Alexander, Morison and Dickson should not be passed up. Finally, two studies: A Gospel for A New People by Stanton, and Garland's Reading Matthew make very helpful contributions." Paul Henebury,

The second messiah, "Messiah Ben David," would establish His Kingdom to rule and reign. Ref-0011, p. 57. However, "Immanuel" is no the given name of the Messiah. Rather, it was to be seen as a symbolic, descriptive throne title. Similarly, David's son was given the name Solomon, but his descriptive royal title was "Jedidiah" or "Beloved of the Lord" (2 Sam 12:24-25)." Ref-1272, p. 155n22. messianic prophecy - importance : ☪ + " . . . the foremost reason for seeing the Hebrew Bible as a messianic document is that this appears to be the best way to explain the evidence of the Scriptures themselves. . . . To put it plainly, it appears that the best way of understanding the Bible as a whole is to see the Old Testament as predicting the coming of the Messiah and the New Testament revealing him to be Jesus of Nazareth. A commitment to faithful exegesis of the Hebrew Bible should yield a messianic interpretation. A second reason for treating the Hebrew Bible as a messianic document is that it provides the most biblical apologetic for Jesus as the Messiah. Without the evidence of the Tanak, it would be impossible to identify Jesus as the Promised One. Consistently, the apostles contended that Jesus of Nazareth was "the

Messiah . . . the One Moses wrote about in the Law (and so did the prophets)" (John 1:41,45). This was the perspective that they learned from Jesus himself when he said that "everything written about Me in the Law of Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms must be fulfilled" (Luke 24:44). Affirming the messianic hope is the apologetic linchpin in the New Testament for proving that Jesus is indeed the promised Messiah. For this reason, the apostles, church fathers, the medieval churchmen, biblical theologians, apologists and missionaries have all recognized the importance of messianic prophecy." Ref-1272, pp. 7-8. "Messianic prophecy was the means God used to bring me to faith in Jesus the Messiah. My parents were Holocaust survivors who raised me in a traditional Jewish home. We were Orthodox in our Jewish beliefs and practices and, as such, I did believe in the future coming of a personal Messiah. Even so, it was not a central issue of my life. However, that changed when my mother announced that she believed in Jesus. This led to my father divorcing her and a radical shift in my life. I decided to study the messianic prophecies of the Hebrew Bible and prove my mother wrong in attributing their fulfillment to Jesus of Nazareth. Although I was initially quite confident of my opinion, in time I was surprised to see that there was far more credibility to the messiahship of Jesus than I had first anticipated. After dealing with my fears of ostracism from the Jewish community, based on my new conviction that the Scriptures foretold a suffering Messiah who would be rejected by His own people and provide forgiveness through his death and resurrection, I put my trust in Jesus as Messiah and Lord. . . . I would never have made this decision apart from studying messianic prophecy. In fact, apart from messianic prediction and fulfillment, Jesus could not be identified as the Messiah of Israel, and if not that, then He could not be the Messiah of the world. It is for this reason, joined with my commitment to exegetical accuracy, that I believe it is essential to understand the Hebrew Bible as messianic." Ref-1272, pp. 11-12. "If messianic hope is so evident using a literary reading of the Hebrew Bible, why is it that so many contemporary exegetes fail to recognize it? . . . it is surprising that some many prefer a historical reading of Old Testament texts rather than an eschatological, messianic interpretation. Luke records that the Messiah Jesus saw Himself in the text of the Hebrew Bible (Luke 24:25-27,44-46). Therefore, it is especially unexpected that so many who accept the authority of the New Testament and the deity of Jesus view Old Testament texts as having their fulfillments in historical figures rather than the future Messiah. Old Testament scholar Louis Goldberg noted this trend of interpretation and lamented that contemporary evangelical scholarship had begun to deny "any messianic message in key passages, i.e., Psalm 22, Isaiah 7:14, as well as others." Moreover, he bemoans that such approaches find all fulfillments "at the time of writing" rather than being considered predictions of the Messiah. As such, Goldberg is shocked that these evangelical Old Testament scholars agree more readily with Jewish anti-Christian polemicists than with the Messiah Jesus' own explanation of the Old Testament." Ref-1272, p. 112.

The approximate specific gravity of gold is 19, silver 11, brass 8.5, and iron 7.8. . . . Methuselah - God's patience : Gen. 5:27; Gen. 6:3; 1Pe. 3:20 ☺ + The name Methuselah comes from two roots: muth, a root that means "death"; and from shalach, which means "to bring," or "to send forth." Thus, the name Methuselah signifies, "his death shall bring." Methuselah was 187 when he had Lamech, and lived 782 years more. Lamech had Noah when he was 182. The Flood came in Noah's 600th year. 187 + 182 + 600 = 969, Methuselah's age when he died. It is interesting that Methuselah's life was, in effect, a symbol of God's mercy in forestalling the coming judgment of the flood. It is therefore fitting that his lifetime is the oldest in the Bible, symbolizing the extreme extensiveness of God's mercy. -- Chuck Missler

Midrashim (plural) were collected into a body of material between 100 B.C. and A.D. 300.

Within the Midrash were two major parts: the Halakah (procedure), a further expansion of the Torah only, and the Haggada (declaration, explanation), being commentaries on the entire Old Testament. The doctrine of a millennial kingdom on earth, introduced by the advent of Christ in His glory, is a Jewish fable without support from the word of God. A deeper study of the sacred volume dissipates this false prejudice and reveals the fact that, not only are "the thousand years" of which John speaks found everywhere in both Testaments, but that next to the eternal state, the millennial blessedness of God's people on earth, and of the nations, is the one high point in all prophecy, from Moses to John, the bright, broad tableland of all eschatology." But, as they assert that those who then rise again shall enjoy the leisure of immoderate carnal banquets, furnished with an amount of meat and drink such as not only to shock the feeling of the temperate, but even to surpass the measure of credulity itself, such assertions can be believed only by the carnal." Ref-0685, p. 161. "Particularly important, in view of future developments, is Augustine's further teaching concerning those who govern the kingdom during the present age. In the Book of the Secrets of Enoch, 32:2; 33:1-2 Enoch holds the idea that the history of man will run for seven thousand years, the last millennium of which will be one of great blessedness and will precede the eighth millennium, which is eternity. According to R.H. Charles, Enoch's view can be explained as follows: As the world was made in six days, so its history will be accomplished in 6,000 years, and as the six days of creation were followed by one of rest, so the 6,000 years of the world's history would be followed by a rest of 1,000 years. On its close would begin the eighth eternal day of blessedness when time should be no more, xxxii. 2-xxxiii. Ref-0037, p. 2:430 Ref-0032, p. 294. "For instance, while 2 Baruch 73:1 speaks of Messiah's sitting down "in eternal peace on the throne of the kingdom," 40:3 says that "his dominion will last forever until the world of corruption has ended," thus anticipating something more. There is also diversity of opinion [within intertestamental Judaism] about the length of the final age-messianic kingdom. While 2 Baruch is vague, saying simply "until the world of corruption has ended," 2 Esdras 7:28 gives four hundred years as the length of the messianic period. Jubilees 23:27 mentions, but in a rather ambiguous context, a period of one thousand years (cf. Rev. 20:1-7). The Talmud tractate Sanhedrin 97a sets a period of two thousand years." James F. Stitzinger, "The Rapture in Twenty Centuries of Biblical Interpretation," Ref-0164 Vol. 13 No. 2, Fall 2002, p. 153n19. "In summary, millenarianism remained a normative doctrine during the first four centuries of the Christian era. It was not overthrown until Augustine brought together the concepts of the Church and the kingdom of Christ in such a way as to almost equivocate the two. However, two important factors had already set the stage for the transformation of the eschatological hope of a messianic kingdom into an ecclesiastical theocracy. Since the time of Justin, the prospect of an earthly messianic kingdom had become an altogether Christian hope, to the exclusion of ethnic Israel's eschatological hope. The other factor was the widespread use made of allegorical interpretation of Scripture." Ref-0685, p. 159.

One such example may be noted in Isa. 2:2-4 and its parallel in Mic. 4:1-3. . . . the immediate context portrays conditions which are not yet perfect. For example, God is said to 'judge between the nations and render decisions for many peoples' (Isa 2:4). Interpreting this as God's action through the Messiah, non-dispensationalist E. J. Young explains the meaning of these statements by saying, 'God is now represented as one who in a peaceful manner intervenes in the disputes of nations, and settles them so that the nations change the implements of war into utensils of peace'. Concerning the Messiah's rendering decisions for many peoples, Young notes further that this 'pictures the LORD in the position of Judge and Arbiter who pronounces decisions concerning the nations and their disagreements' (The Book of Isaiah, NICOT [Eerdmans, 1965], p. 107). To say the least, this prophecy is difficult to apply to the present work of Christ in the world, and it would seem impossible to see Christ performing these tasks in a perfect sinless state." Ref-0072, pp. 124-126 "Lactantius, c. 240-c. 320, was a gifted rhetorician who, after his conversion, became a Christian apologist and an historian of the last season of imperial persecution against the Church. In his major work he writes polemically of the dead who "will rise again, not after a thousand years from their death, but that, when again restored to life, they may reign with God a thousand years." . . . In chapter seventy-two [in an Epitome of his former work] he follows the sequence of events described in Revelation 19:11-20:15, stating emphatically that Christ "will deliver all nations into subjection to the righteous who are alive, and will raise the righteous dead to eternal life, and will Himself reign with them on the earth, and will build the holy city, and this kingdom of the righteous will be for a thousand years." millennial kingdom - law : Exe. 40:5 (- 46:24); Exe. 47:22-23 ☪ "One example of the content of Millennial or Kingdom Law is Ezekiel 40:5-46:24, which spells out the rules and regulations of the millennial system of the priesthood and sacrifice. Although some have misunderstood this section to mean a re-institution of the Mosaic system, that is not the case. The Mosaic Law will never be re-instituted for the church saint today or for the millennial saints in the future. A comparison of the details of the sacrifices in Ezekiel with those of the Mosaic system shows too many differences." Arnold G. Fruchtenbaum, Ref-0067, Vol. 3 No. 6, p. 6. Ref-0072, p. 120. "Papias (c. 60-130), bishop of Hierapolis, is the first post-apostolic writer whose millenarianism is documented. Knowledge of it reaches us by way of Irenaeus and Eusebius. The latter, alluding to certain things which Papias is said to have gathered from unwritten traditions, writes, "To these belong his statement that there will be a period of some thousand years after the resurrection of the dead, and that the kingdom of Christ will be set up in material form on this very earth." return immediately to earth in the single event of the rapture and second coming. This would seem to eliminate all redeemed, unresurrected people from the earth at that point in time so that there would be no one left to populate the millennial kingdom. The reason is simple: If the rapture occurs after the Tribulation, then all the sheep (redeemed) will have been removed from the earth; thus, there would be no sheep to be part of that judgment if it occurs at the second coming, which is a single event with the rapture [in the posttribulational view]." Ref-0079, p. 89. millennial kingdom - revolutionary war : Dan. 2:34-35; Dan. 2:45; Rev. 13:1 ☪ "A lively tradition of millennialism also helped to forge a link between political freedom and Christian liberty. Speculation of this sort encouraged the notion that the great conflict between God and Satan was somehow being played out in the struggle [of America] with Britain, and that a victory over Parliament might signal the near approach of God's rule on earth, the millennium. During the war, several ministers preached sermons pointing out how closely British oppression resembled the beast described in the thirteenth chapter of Revelation. At least one New Englander thought that America might be the stone from the book of Daniel that strikes "the image of the beast," becomes "a great mountain" filling all the earth, and leads to the time when "discord shall cease, and Tyrants be no more." This is the standard amillennial position. As Milton Terry says, 'this vision of restored and perfected temple, service, and land symbolizes the perfected kingdom of God and his Messiah.' Fourth view-- The glorious descriptions found in this prophecy will surely be fulfilled at the millennium, but do not fuss over the how of fulfillment. While the Levites as a class shall perform temple service, they shall be barred from priestly duties for their past sins (Eze. 44:10-14). There shall be a daily morning sacrifice, but no evening sacrifice (Eze. 46:13-15). The offerings will be the Burnt, the Meal, the Drink, the Sin, the Peace (Eze. 45:17), and the Trespass offering (Eze. 42:13). To put such a meaning on the Temple and its measurement and all the details enumerated by the prophet is to contradict all reason. The Temple is real, for it is the place of Jehovah's presence upon the earth; the ministers and the ministrations are equally real, for His servants serve him in his Temple. The service of Jehovah by sacrifice and offering is considered to continue when Israel is perfect and the kingdom the Lord's even by the greatest prophets (Isa. 19:19-21; 60:7; 66:20; Jer. 33:18)."

The grinding pedestals, or millstones, were probably the reference for the imagery Jesus used when teaching at Capernaum, when he cautioned it would be better for someone to be thrown into the sea (of Galilee) with a millstone tied around his neck than to cause a child to sin (Mt 18:6; Mk 9:42; Lk 17:2)." The first period came at the time of Moses and the deliverance of Israel from Egypt; the second, at the time of the outstanding prophets Elijah and Elisha; and the fourth, at the time of Christ’s first advent. All of these times were characterized by significant developments, calling for the demonstration of authenticating credentials. The first and fourth were the occasions of establishing the Old and the New Covenants, respectively; and the first and third, the two times of captivity to, and deliverance from, a foreign power.” “Scripture easily confirms five primary periods of signs, miracles, and wonders. While many believe that God is just doing signs, miracles, and wonders at will, continually, or at any time, this is biblically not so. The five periods (time frames) concern Moses, Elijah and Elisha, Christ, the apostles, and Antichrist.” Ref-1216, p. 200.

Mishnah : ☺ “to repeat” Basic part of the Talmud. Laws and commentaries forming the core of the Oral Law. Compiled and edited about 200 C.E. by Judah Hanasi. “The Mishnah (teaching), which was concluded at the beginning of the third century, covers the whole range of Jewish legislation as well as religious and ethical teachings transmitted by the Tannaim who were the authorities on the Oral Law from the time of Hillel to that of Rabbi Judah ha-Nasi, a period of about two centuries. The Gemara is the interpretation of the Mishnah. . .” Ref-0006, pp. 127-128. “The Mishnah (repetition, explanation, teaching) was completed at about A.D. 200, and was a digest of all the oral laws from the time of Moses. It was regarded as the Second Law, the Torah being the First Law. This work was written in Hebrew, and it covered traditions as well as explanations of the oral law.” Ref-0075, p. 502. “The Mishnah is a philosophical law code, completed around A.D. 200, which is the first authoritative and canonical writing in Judaism after the Hebrew Scriptures. The Judaism that appeals to the Mishnah recognizes no holy book written between the Hebrew Scriptures or ‘Old Testament’ and that document, and all later holy books begin with either Scripture or the Mishnah.” Ref-0137, p. 38. “When the city of Jerusalem fell in A.D. 70, together with the temple, the dominion of the priestly families and the supreme court of the Sanhedrin fell with them. The only party in Judaism which was capable of undertaking the necessary work of reconstruction was that of the Pharisees, and this they did, not on a political but on a spiritual basis. Led by Yohanan the son of Zakkai, they made their headquarters at Jabneh or Jamnia, in the southwest of Palestine. Here they reconstituted the Sanhedrin as a supreme court for the organization of the whole range of religious law, with Yohanan as its first president in its new form. A great body of case-law, ‘the tradition of the elders’ mentioned in the New Testament, had been handed down orally from generation to generation, increasing with the years. The first step toward codifying all the material was no taken. The second step was taken by the great Rabbi Akiba, who was the first to arrange it according to subject matter. After his heroic death in A.D. 135, on the defeat of Bar-Kokhba’s rebellion against Rome, his work was revised and continued by his pupil Rabbi Meir. The work of codification was brought to completion about A.D. 200 by Rabbi Judah, president of the Sanhedrin from 170 to 217. The whole code of religious jurisprudence thus compiled is known as the Mishnah.” Ref-0239, p. 102.

Jewish coins included the shekel, half shekel, quarter shekel, and the lepton. The latter is the copper coin, the widow's mite of Mark 12:42 and Luke 21:2; it represents the smallest imaginable amount of money.³² The Greek drachma was a day's wage for a laborer. The pound or mina (Luke 19:11-27) was the equivalent of a hundred drachmas. The didrachma held the value of two drachmas while the stater was worth four drachmas.³³ The talent (Mtt. 18:24; 25:14-30) was not actually a coin but a unit of laboring. It represented a very large sum. The ten thousand talents of Matthew 18:24 is an almost incomprehensible amount of debt, especially for a common person. In Roman currency the denarius (Mtt. 20:9) represented a day's wage and was thus equal in value to the Greek drachma. One hundred denarii equaled a Greek mina. [32] One lepton was worth about one-half of the Roman quadrans (penny) or one-eighth of the assarion. [33] The didrachma was equivalent to the half-shekel, the amount of the annual temple tax paid by all Jews (Mtt. 17:24). The stater is probably in view when Mtt. 26:14 speaks of the thirty pieces of silver paid to Judas Iscariot to betray Jesus. Although the exact value is uncertain, Judas was probably paid in the neighborhood of 120 days' wages." Ref-1200, p. 246.

We will consider four possibilities: 1. elders must be married; 2. elders must not be polygamists; 3. elders may marry only once; 4. elders must be maritally and sexually above reproach. . . . A final interpretation, and the one favored here, is the simplest and least problem creating. It contends that the phrase

'the husband of one wife' is meant to be a possible statement that expresses faithful, monogamous marriage. . . . [a] 'one-woman man.' This latter phrase closely follows the Greek wording." Ref-0205, p. 190, 192. "Some would interpret the words . . . as requiring those church officials to be married, and thus barring unmarried men from those offices. But a glance at the Greek text will show that the words "husband" and "wife" are both anarthrous. That means that the quality, or character, is stressed. . . . It is not that they must be married, but that if they are married, they must be men of such character that they will only have one wife. It is a prohibition of polygamy." Ref-0946, pp. 21-22. mount - sermon on : Mtt. 5:1 ☪ The view that the Sermon on the Mount sets forth a rule of life for the millennial kingdom has some serious difficulties. "The greatest is seen in the many references throughout the discourse to conditions which are incongruous to the millennial kingdom. For instance, the disciples are to be reviled and persecuted for Christ's sake (Mtt. 5:11-12); wickedness must be prevalent since the disciples are considered to be the salt of the earth and the light of the world (Mtt. 5:13-16); they are to pray for the coming of the kingdom (Mtt. 6:10); they are warned concerning false prophets (Mtt. 7:15). This is indeed a strange portrayal of that kingdom which was pictured by the Old Testament prophets! . . . If the Sermon on the Mount is the constitution of the kingdom age, it certainly contains a great amount of extraneous material about the tribulation. The millennial view simply leaves too much unexplained relative to the non-kingdom material and its relevance of the sermon." Ref-0143, pp. 90-91.

Even with the noise of the busy modern city of Nablus, I myself have been in the park at the top of Gerizim and clearly heard the voices of children playing in the Balata refugee camp at Gerizim's base." David G. Hansen, Shechem: Its Archaeological and Contextual Significance, Ref-0066, 18.2 (2005), p. 37. "In 1879, J. W. McGarvey made a tour of the Holy Land. His visit to the area of Nablus (biblical Shechem) is particularly interesting because of his acoustical test. Today tourists are not able to visit this area, and if they were, the urbanization of the area has made a similar experience impossible today. This section is from Lands of the Bible, originally published in 1880, pages 506-8 (emphasis added). A limited preview is available at Google Books <http://books.google.com/books?id=UxIR49W76CgC&printsec=frontcover&dq=mcgarvey+lands+bible&ei=vUlnSau9LIeYAtnr5HMAw#PPA506.M1> . . . Thanks to Paul Mitchell for discovering this nugget and sending it on. "On reaching Shechem we called on Brother El Karey, the only Baptist missionary in Palestine. I had a letter of introduction to him, given me by a Baptist preacher from London whom I met at Naples. He received us very cordially, explained to us his missionary labors, and, being a native of the place, though educated in England, he was full of the local information for which we were in search. We especially wanted to learn the best way to reach Aenon, the locality of which was definitely fixed by Lieutenant Conder, but which our dragoman had never visited. He gave us the desired information, and the next morning, leaving our tents pitched at Shechem, we made an excursion to that interesting spot. Our route took us back through the valley, and we resolved that while passing between the two mountains of Ebal and Gerizim, in the still morning air, we would try the experiment of reading the blessings and curses. It will be remembered by the reader that, in compliance with directions given before the death of Moses, Joshua assembled all the people on these two mountains, stationing six tribes on one, and six opposite to them on the other, and he stood between and read to them all the blessings and curses of the law (See Deut 27-28, Josh 8:30-35). It has been urged by some skeptics that it was impossible for Joshua to read so as to be heard by the whole multitude of Israel. It is a sufficient answer to this to show that while Joshua read, the Levites were directed to repeat the words "with a loud voice" (Deut 27:14), and that it was an easy matter to station them at such points that their repetitions, like those of officers along the line of a marching army, could carry the words to the utmost limits of the multitude. But it is interesting to know that the spot chosen by God for this reading is a vast natural amphitheatre, in which the human voice can be heard to a surprising distance. About half-way between Shechem and the mouth of the valley in which it stands there is a deep, semicircular recess in the face of Mount Ebal, and a corresponding one precisely opposite to it in Mount Gerizim. No man with his eyes open can ride along the valley without being struck with this singular formation. As soon as I saw it I recognized it as the place of Joshua's reading. It has been asserted repeatedly by travelers that, although two men stationed on the opposite slopes of these two mountains are a mile apart, they can read so as to be heard by each other. We preferred to try the experiment in stricter accordance with Joshua's example; so I took a position, Bible in hand, in the middle of the valley, while Brother Taylor and Frank, to represent six tribes, climbed halfway up the slope of Mount Gerizim; and Brother Earl, to represent the other six tribes, took a similar position on Mount Ebal. I read, and they were to pronounce the amen after each curse or blessing. Brother Taylor heard me distinctly, and I could hear his response. But Brother Earl, though he could hear my voice, could not distinguish the words. This was owing to the fact that some terrace-walls on the side of the mountain prevented him from ascending high enough, and the trees between me and him interrupted the passage of the sound. The experiment makes it perfectly obvious that if Joshua had a strong voice,--which I have not,--he could have been heard by his audience without the assistance of the Levites. As to the space included in the two amphitheatres, I think it ample to accommodate the six hundred thousand men with their families, though of this I cannot be certain. If more space was required, the aid of the Levites was indispensable." ☉ "The site favored by most scholars is Gebel Musa (Mountain of Moses), or one of several nearby mountains, in the high-mountain region of southern Sinai. . . . The identification of Gebel Musa as Mt. Sinai is a Christian tradition originating in the fourth century. We have no preserved Jewish tradition for the location of Mt. Sinai. Thus, there is a gap of 1800 years between the receiving of the law on Mt. Sinai (1446 BC) and the beginning of the Christian tradition. What is more, there is no documentation in any Christian source as to why this particular mountain was chosen. The only Jewish tradition we have concerning Mt. Sinai is that it is a low mountain (Babylonian Talmud and BaMidbar Rabbah). Gebel Musa, on the other hand, is very high (7,497 ft.). There are a number of other difficulties with a southern Sinai location for Mt. Sinai. To begin with, it is in the opposite direction from the Promised Land! Moreover, it is much too far from Midian (east of the Gulf of Aqaba) for Moses to have been shepherding Jethro's flocks there (Exod. 3:1). A third difficulty is that Mt. Sinai (also called Mt. Horeb) was located in the territory of Edom (Deut. 33:2; Judges 5:4; Hab. 3:3), which did not extend south of the north shore of the Gulf of Aqaba (Crew 2002). The most serious objection to the traditional location, however, is that it is too far from Kadesh Barnea for the Israelites with their livestock (Exod. 13:38) to have made the journey in 11 days (Deut. 1:2; Wood 2000: 99)." name - not pronounced : ☪ "Interestingly, no one really knows how to pronounce this most important of God's names. Because it was considered too holy to utter, down through the ages the YHVH was vowel-pointed with the vowels for Adonai. Today almost all Jewish people automatically say 'Adonai' whenever they see this name in the Sidur (Jewish prayer book) or Scriptures. Some will simply say ?Ha-Shem, which means 'the name.' Such was not always the case prior to the destruction of the first Temple in 586 B.C. In those days the name was pronounced regularly, with its own vowels. This fact is clear from the Lachish Letters, written just prior to the Temple's destruction. However, by the third century B.C., the pronunciation of YHVH was avoided altogether." Thomas Simcox, "I Am That I Am", Ref-0052, July/August 2003, pp. 15-16. "Intertestamental writers employ circumlocutions, roundabout ways of referring to him. Such phrases as "the God of heaven," "the heavens," "the power," and "the Blessed One" are common in the writings of the period. Use of the most sacred personal name was particularly shunned. Substitutes were increasingly sought for YHWH (the tetragrammaton [the four letters] = Yahweh). Adonia (Lord) began to replace the sacred name in public readings of Scripture. Priests mumbled or swallowed it in temple prayers and benedictions. The Aramaic targums replaced it with Memra (Word). The Septuagint translated it with kyrios (Lord), the form in which it occurs in New Testament quotations of the Old. The Talmud and other rabbinic sources indicate that by the time of the death of Simon the Just (c. 200 B.C.) the divine name (YHWH) was no longer pronounced, except by the high priest on Yom Kippur. This was almost certainly the culmination of a long process during which use of the name had been progressively restricted. There were probably two concerns behind this development. First, the fences around the third commandment restricted use of the name--a protection against misuse of it was to avoid all use of it. Second, increased contact with Hellenism and other forms of paganism probably made the use of the personal name of God seem too materialistic, too much like dragging him to the level of the supposed deities of other religions. Whatever the reason, the result was to increase mentally the distance between Israel and her God. For, as a general rule, calling someone only by a generic term or title tends toward a subconscious depersonalization of that individual." Ref-1200, pp. 268-269.

Such a view fails to properly account for (1) the cursed status of the universe and (2) the fallible nature of man's interpretation of the evidence of science. "But, as the Bible describes (and we have pointed out many times), nature is cursed--it is under judgment because of sin. I have many quotes from secular sources (e.g. Carl Sagan) stating that there can't be an all-powerful God because nature is full of imperfections. Some say that there can't be a loving God because of all the death, bloodshed, disease, suffering and violence in the world. If this is the 'second book' of revelation, they contest, then 'God is an ogre!'" Ken Ham, Answers In Genesis, <http://www.answersingenesis.org/news/0701rbc.asp> ". . . as the term general revelation is historically and universally employed in evangelical theology, the term general is intended to characterize not the character of revelation under discussion, but the audience to whom that revelation is available. . . [i]t is general in its scope; that is, it reaches to all people. . ." Ref-0108, p. 76. "Revelation is from God; thus it is by definition true and authoritative. To assign human discoveries to the category of general revelation is to imbue them with an aura of validity and consequent authority that they do not, indeed, they cannot merit. Thus, to assign a concept to the category of general revelation when that concept is in fact a theory concocted by a person is, in effect, to lend God's name to a person's ideas. That is fallacious, no matter the intrinsic truth or falsehood of the theory under consideration." Bookman, Douglas, "The Scriptures and Biblical Counseling," in Ref-0108, p. 74. "Reasons why general revelation should not include matters such as science, mathematics, literature, and music are the following. First, "general" cannot refer to the content of the revelation. Second, biblical references to general revelation limit it to information about God. Third, sin distorts human discoveries of the non-Christian world in secular fields. Fourth, general revelation is accessible to all, not just to specialists in certain fields. . . . Bruce Demarest and Gordon Lewis define general revelation -- sometimes referred to as natural revelation -- as "the disclosure of God in nature, in providential history, and in the moral law within the heart, whereby all persons at all times and places gain a rudimentary understanding of the Creator and his moral demands." . . . Some of the principles of mathematics and astronomy, for example, would not qualify as general revelation because their discovery came after many generations of humans had lived and died on the earth. Also, those principles remain hidden to significant portions of people alive today, so they cannot qualify as general revelation. . . . [Biblical] texts show that the content of general revelation deals with God and various aspects of His being and activities. Any efforts to widen the scope of general revelation to include information or theories about aspects of creation, man, or anything else besides God do not have support from the Bible, which limits the scope of general revelation to information about God. . . . If human discovery of information comes late in history, it cannot be general revelation. If it comes as a result of human ingenuity, it cannot be general revelation. General revelation is the common possession of all people of all time and in all places. It is divinely generated revelation imposed on the whole human race and impossible to avoid." Ref-0231, pp. 113-119. "Some may argue that sin blinds the mind of the exegete of Scripture too, but at least two factors distinguish biblical interpretation from interpretation of general revelation. One is the propositional nature of the truth of Scripture, a property that general revelation cannot claim. The other is the promise of the Spirit to the believer to illuminate Scripture (cf. John 16:13; Rom. 8:14; 1Cor. 2:15). No such provisions exist to facilitate the interpretation of general revelation." Ref-0231, p. 123. "Science should not be dismissed, but it must be kept in its proper ministerial role as a servant to the Bible, and never placed in a magisterial role over and above the Bible." Ref-0232, p. 17. "The classical definition of 'general revelation is given by Bruce Demarest and Gordon Lewis: [T]he disclosure of God in nature, in providential history, and in the moral law within the heart, whereby all persons at all times and places gain a rudimentary understanding of the Creator and his moral demands. Elsewhere, Demarest adds: General revelation, mediated through nature, conscience, and the providential ordering of history, traditionally has been understood as a universal witness to God's existence and character. . . . Is there any warrant, then, for broadening the scope of general revelation to include scientific study? Robert Thomas answers in the negative for several reasons: (1) Knowledge of general revelation should be common to all people: 'It is not something they must seek to discover. It is not hidden truth such as the mysteries of special revelation revealed to the Apostles. It is information that is common knowledge to all . . . and impossible for mankind to avoid.' (2) Modern science is not general revelation, since most scientific knowledge is of recent origin, and only comprehensible to those with advanced training in the various scientific disciplines. . . ." Andrew S. Kulikovskiy, Scripture and General Revelation, Ref-0691, 19(2) 2005, pp. 24-25. "Thus, the physical world is not a second book of revelation from God, but a signpost pointing to God, the almighty Creator. In the final analysis, the double revelation theory fails to acknowledge the inherent limitations of scientific knowledge and method, especially in relation to the study of origins. Dr John Whitcomb adds: The scientific method assumes without proof the universal validity of uniformity as a law of nature, by extrapolating present processes forever into the past and future; and it ignores the possible anti-theistic bias of the scientist himself as he handles the "facts" of nature in arriving at a cosmology (a theory concerning the basic structure and character of the universe) and a cosmogony (a theory concerning the origin of the universe and its parts)." Andrew S. Kulikovskiy, Scripture and General Revelation, Ref-0691, 19(2) 2005, p. 26. "Indeed, the task of interpreting the Bible is apparently much simpler and less error-prone than interpreting scientific data. Scientist Taylor Jones acknowledges that the 'Word of God is inherently more reliable than science', and that Scripture is much easier to interpret than nature.⁴⁰ Likewise, Robert C. Newman admits that since general revelation is not in human language, 'it is more liable to misinterpretation than is special revelation'.⁴¹" Andrew S. Nazarene - Jesus to be : Isa. 11:1; Mtt. 2:23 ☪

"a Branch neser shall grow" Isa. 11:1 "He shall be called a Nazarene", quoted in Matthew 2:23 as 'what was spoken by the prophets', stand in that form in no known prophetic book. It has been suggested that there may be an allusion to Isaiah 11:1, where the expected son of David is described as a 'branch' to grow out of the roots of Jesse, as though Heb. neser (?branch) were to be read as nosri (?Nazarine). (This device, by which it is suggested that one word be replaced by another having the same consonants but a different pattern of vowels, is familiar in the rabbinical writings: 'Read not X but Y.')

Ref-0073, p. 52. "[The term Nazarene] looks at the Old Testament prophecies of reproach such as Psalm 22:6-9 and Isaiah 53 as being summed up in the title Nazarene. 'To be called a Nazarene was to be spoken of as dispicable.' [Morison, A Practical Commentary, p. 25] Matthew is pointing to those prophecies in the Old Testament which portray the Messiah as rejected and despised and claiming their fulfillment in the fact that Jesus is reared at Nazareth." Ref-0143, p. 57. "But what theme is Matthew summarizing by calling Jesus a Nazarene [Mat. 2:19-23]? He is using "Nazarene" as a term of derision and is summarizing the Old Testament teaching that the Messiah was to be despised. That "Nazarene" was itself a disparaging term in the first century is evident from Nathanael's reaction to hearing of a Messiah from Nazareth, objecting "Can anything good come out of Nazareth? (see also John 7:41-42,52). Moreover the only other place Matthew uses "Nazarene," it is used in a derogatory way (Matt 26:72). Thus, according to Matthew, the prophets taught that Messiah would be despised." Ref-1272, p. 110.

Nazarenes - cursed by prayer☆

Nazarenes - cursed by prayer : John 9:22;

John 12:42; John 16:2 ☪ "In the post-destruction decade, the Pharisees, under the leadership of Yohanan ben Zakkai, reorganized Judaism along Pharisaic lines at Yavneh (Greek: Jamnia). One of their many decisions was the introduction into the Amidah prayer. . . of an additional petition. . . which was basically a curse pronounced on the Nazarenes and 'heretics.' That innovation made it impossible for Jewish believers to continue participating in synagogue worship. . . The Nazarenes could not support Bar Cochba's rebellion in A.D. 132-135 due to Rabbi Akiba's advocacy of him as the Messiah. Although the sources are scanty, it appears that this pseudo-messiah strongly persecuted the Nazarenes, which, in addition to their earlier expulsion from the synagogue, effectively led to their final rejection even from the Jewish community." William C. Varner, "Do We Need Messianic Synagogues?", Ref-0164, 14/1 (2003):47-62(59). Varner refers to Jacob Jocz, The Jewish People and Jesus Christ (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker, 1979) 51-57,71. "Sometime in the first century the wording of the twelfth petition of the Jewish daily prayer (the Shemoneh 'Esreh) was altered to include a condemnation of Jewish Christians. Thus the difference in working between the common version and that of the

Cairo genizah (the Palestinian version):

Babylonian Version: "And for informers let there be no hope; and let all who do wickedness quickly perish; and let them all be speedily destroyed; and uproot and crush and hurl down and humble the insolent, speedily in our days. Blessed art thou, Lord, who curshes enemies and humbles the insolent." Palestinian Version: "And for apostates let there be no hope; and may the insolent kingdom be quickly uprooted, in our days. And may the Nazarenes and the heretics perish quickly; and may they be erased from the Book of Life; and may they not be inscribed with the righteous. Blessed art thou, Lord, who humbles the insolent." The word translated "Nazarenes" is the modern Hebrew word (Našorim) for Jewish Christians; the word translated "heretics" (minim) is a broader term for heretics in general. The wording from the Cairo version, usually assumed to come from the end of the first century, calls to mind John 9:22; 12:42; and 16:2, which speak of exclusion of Jesus' followers from the synagogue (in contrast to persecution in the synagogues [Mark 13:9; Luke 12:11])." If one assumes that the Nazirite regulation about corpses applied to animals as well as humans, that Samson drank wine at the wedding, and that his battle exploits placed him in the situation envisioned in Numbers 6:9, then he had violated all but one of the Nazirite rules prior to his encounter with Delilah.  Nebuchadnezzar - golden image : Dan. 3:1 ☺
 "The image of gold is described as being sixty cubits (90 ft.) high and six cubits (9 ft.) broad, a very impressive sight erected in the plain of Dura. The Hebrew word for image implies, as Leupold says, 'An image in the very broadest sense,' probably in human form although the proportions are far too narrow for a normal figure. Scripture does not solve this problem, but most commentators agree that images of this kind in antiquity frequently varied from ordinary human proportions. The image may have been on a pedestal with only the upper part of the image resembling human form. . . . Leupold cites numerous ancient images such as that of Zeus in a temple at Babylon; the golden images on the top of the Belus temple, one of which was forty cubits high; and the Colossus at Rhodes which was seventy cubits high." Ref-0005, p. 80. ". . . the most probable location is a mound located six miles southeast of Babylon consisting of a large square of brick construction which would have ideally served as a base for such an image. . ." "A remarkable confirmation of the Scripture narrative is afforded by the recent discovery of a bronze door-step, which bears an inscription to the effect that it was presented by Nebuchadnezzar to the great temple at Borsippa as a votive offering on account of his recovery from a terrible illness."  Nebuchadnezzar - vs. Nebuchadrezzar : ☺
 "Some skeptics claim that this [the spelling Nebuchadnezzar] is an error, and that the "correct" spelling is -rezzar. Indeed, this is the normal Hebrew adaptation from the original Akkadian version, nabu-kudurr-u-sur, meaning "Nabu protect(s) the eldest son," after the Babylonian god Nabu. One theory for the difference is that it was normal Hebrew linguistic practice to change the r to an n. But van Selms proposed another theory, that the OT's -nezzar spelling may be derived from a snide reference to Nebuchadnezzar's lycanthropy (animal behavior) by Jewish opposition groups. That is, from nabu-kudanu-usur, meaning "Nabu protect(s) the mule." Ref-0232, p. 21.

Nimrod : Gen. 10:8; Mic. 5:6 ☪ "We will rebel." "the Jerusalem Targum. . . speaks of Nimrod's wickedness. . . Josephus wrote, 'it was Nimrod who excited them to such an affront and contempt of God. . . He [was also a tyrant] seeing no other way of turning men from the fear of God' (1,4,2). Philo, an Alexandrian Jew in the first century after Christ, said, 'Nimrod. . . having a nature truly dissolute, does not at all keep fast the spiritual bond of the soul, nor of nature, nor of consistency of manners, but rather like a giant born of the earth, prefers earthly to heavenly things. . . On which account there is much propriety in the expression, he was a giant against God, which thus declares the opposition of such beings to the deity; for a wicked man is nothing else than an enemy, contending against God: on which account it has become a proverb that every one who sins greatly ought to be referred to him as the original and chief of sinners, being spoken of as a second Nimrod. (Philo, Questions and Answers on Genesis II, 81)." Ref-0156, Vol. 38 No. 4, March 2002, p. 216. "First, what does the name Nimrod mean? It comes from the Hebrew verb marad, meaning "rebel." Adding an "n" before the "m" it becomes an infinitive construct, "Nimrod." (see Kautzsch 1910: 137 2b, also BDB 1962: 597). The meaning then is "The Rebel." Thus "Nimrod" may not be the character's name at all. It is more likely a derisive term of a type, a representative, of a system that is epitomized in rebellion against the Creator, the one true God. Rebellion began soon after the Flood as civilizations were restored. At that time this person became very prominent." David P. Nimrod - wife of : Eze. 8:14; Jer. 7:18; Jer. 44:17-19; Jer. 44:25 ☪ ". . . ancient accounts indicate that the wife of Nimrod, who founded the city of Babylon, became the head of the so-called Babylonian mysteries which consisted of secret religious rites which were developed as a part of the worship of idols of Babylon. She was known by the name of Semiramis and was a high priestess of the idol worship. According to extrabiblical records which have been preserved, Semiramis gave birth to a son who she claimed was conceived miraculously. This son, given the name of Tammuz, was considered a savior of his people and was, in effect, a false messiah, purported to be the fulfillment of the promise given to Eve. . . Idols picturing the mother as the queen of heaven and the babe in her arms are found throughout the ancient world. . . Tammuz, the son, was said to have been killed by a wild beast and afterward brought back to life, obviously a satanic anticipation of the resurrection of Christ." Ref-0032, p. 247.

Nisan - 14 : Ex. 12:6; Deu. 16:6 ☪ "According to Ex. 12:6 the Passover lambs were to be killed "in the evening" of the fourteenth day of the first month, and Lev. 23:5 gives the same date for "the Lord's Passover." In all three passages the Hebrew is literally "between the two evenings" (ASV margin), although in the first two cases the Septuagint translates simply πρὸς ἑσπέραν, "towards evening," and only in the Leviticus passage renders ἀνὰ μέσον τῶν ἑσπερινῶν, "between the evenings." The Mishna states that the daily evening burnt offering was slaughtered at eight and a half hours, that is two-thirty o'clock, and offered at nine and a half hours, that is three-thirty o'clock. If it was the eve of Passover it was slaughtered at seven and a half hours, one-thirty o'clock, and offered at eight and a half hours, two-thirty o'clock, whether on a weekday or the Sabbath; if it was the eve of Passover and this fell on the eve of a Sabbath, that is on a Friday, it was slaughtered at six and a half hours, twelve-thirty o'clock, and offered at seven and a half hours, one-thirty o'clock; and then the Passover offering was slaughtered after that. . . . Explaining this procedure the accompanying Gemara states that "between the evenings" means "from the time that the sun commences to decline in the west." and that the "two evenings" give "two and a half hours before and two and a half hours after and one hour for preparation" of the sacrifice. This means that "evening" begins as soon as the sun passes its midday zenith, and that the "two evenings" are from twelve to two-thirty o'clock, and from three-thirty until six o'clock respectively. Thus the daily evening burnt offering is ordinarily sacrificed in the hour between these two evenings, but when the Passover must also be sacrificed the same afternoon then the daily sacrifice is moved ahead. . . . According to Josephus the Passover sacrifices were conducted from the ninth to the eleventh hour, that is from three to five o'clock in the afternoon, and this was presumably the standard practice in the first century A.D. . . . In Deu. 16:6, however, it is said that the Passover sacrifice is to be offered "in the evening at the going down of the sun." The Talmudic explanation of this was that the evening meant the afternoon and was the time when the Passover was to be slaughtered, and that the sunset was the time when it was to be eaten. The Sadducees and the Samaritans, however, held that the slaughtering of the lamb itself was to take place between sunset and darkness." Ref-0840, pp. 11-12.

In John 5:29, the noun ἀναστασιν (resurrection) is translated as a verb ("will rise"). The two types of resurrections, represented by the genitives ζωῆς ("of life") and κρίσεως ("of judgment") are mistranslated "to live" and "to be condemned." The clear meaning: "to the resurrection of life. . . to the resurrection of damnation" which denotes two resurrection events or categories is less clear in the NIV which says "will rise to live. . . will rise to be condemned." 2. In Eph. 3:6 the NIV adds "together with Israel" when Ἰσραηλ is not mentioned by any Greek text. Since the use of the term "Israel" in the NT is contested by some, is misleading for those studying its use. 3. In 1Cor. 7:37 the NIV translates τηρεω (to keep) as "not to marry." In the next verse, 1Cor. 7:38, the NIV translates εκγαμιζω as "to marry" when it actually means "to give in marriage." The term for "marry" is γαμεω (as in Mtt. 5:32). The result being that the NIV confuses the father of the bride for the bridegroom. 4. In Heb. 11:11 is it Abraham or Sarah who is described? "To one's utter astonishment the New International Version has 'by faith Abraham[!] even though he was past age -- and Sarah herself was barren -- was enabled to become a father because he . . . I do not know of a single manuscript that has this reading. The New International Version has made an incredible and utterly unjustifiable blunder." Ref-0154, p. 8. 5. In 1S. 17:45 is it Lord Almighty or Lord of Hosts? 6. In Mtt. 6:25, the NIV uses the phrase more important -- which can infer something quite different than simply more which the Greek text states. "Actually, there is no Greek behind the phrase 'who have been chosen' [1Pe. 1:2]. The NIV inserted it because they wanted the reader to understand that the following prepositional phrases modify the idea of 'elect.'" Ref-0221, p. 69. Regarding the tendency of dynamic equivalence translations to blur the distinction between the main idea (independent clause) and supporting idea (dependent clause), Mounce offers the example of Mtt. 28:19-20 in the NIV: "What is the main point? It appears that the apostles are told to do two things: 'go!' and 'make disciples!' However, if you look at the Greek, you will find that there is only one imperative: 'make disciples!' 'Go' is a participle, like 'baptizing' and 'teaching.' Jesus is telling his disciples (and us): 'Therefore, as you go, make disciples by baptizing and by teaching.' Wherever you are, wherever you go, . . . you are to make disciples." Ref-0221, p. 102. "In 1976 W. Harold Mare questioned the translation of sarx ("flesh") in 1 Corinthians 5:5 by "the sinful nature," saying that this verse refers to the body. . . . In 1980 Gordon D. Fee objected to the rendering of gynaikos me mapesthai ("[good for a man] not to touch a woman") by "marry" in 1 Corinthians 7:1." Ref-0231, p. 91. The NIV renders Romans 10:4 as, "Christ is the end of the law so that there may be righteousness for everyone who believes" whereas the NKJV and NAS95 have, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone who believes." Is the righteousness in this verse pertaining to the law or to believers? The context (the next verse) suggests the former which the NIV contravenes. The NET Bible has, "For Christ is the end of the law, with the result that there is righteousness for everyone who believes." In Matthew 25:31, the NIV has ""When the Son of Man comes in his glory, and all the angels with him, he will sit on his throne in heavenly glory" which implies a heavenly scene. The Greek has no reference to the word heavenly and the scene is in fact on earth at His Second Coming. "To read that Samuel "hewed Agag in pieces" (1 Samuel 15:33, KJV, RSV, REB; NLT similar) forces us to experience the shock of dismemberment; the rendition "Samuel put Agag to death" (NIV) conceals what happened." Ref-0240, p. 235. In Acts 19:2, the NIV translates εν τω πνεύματι διελεθών ("Paul purposed in the Spirit," NKJV)

as "Paul decided" -- the translators having decided for you that it must be Paul's spirit and not the Holy Spirit. The related passage in Acts 20:22 is attributed to the Holy Spirit, "compelled by the Spirit." This is both inconsistent and leaves the reader without the option of wrestling with which spirit is intended in each passage -- and if they differ or not (Paul's spirit vs. the Holy Spirit). In Daniel 3:1, the NIV translates the dimensions of the image of gold (sixty cubits high and six cubits wide) as "ninety feet high and nine feet wide" completely losing the allusions to six (even six-six-six), the number of man. "Hands" is omitted in numerous passages involving miracles: Mark 6:2; Acts 5:12; 14:3; 19:11. "Although the NIV is not a thoroughly dynamic equivalence translation, there is so much dynamic equivalence influence in the NIV that I cannot teach theology or ethics from it either. I tried it for one semester several years ago, shortly after the NIV first came out, and I gave it up after a few weeks. Time and again I would try to use a verse to make a point and find that the specific detail I was looking for, a detail of wording that I knew was in the original Hebrew or Greek, was missing from the verse in the NIV. Nor can I preach from a dynamic equivalence translation. I would end up explaining verse after verse that the words on the page are not really what the Bible says, and the whole experience would be confusing and would lead people not to trust the Bible in English but to distrust it. Nor can I teach an adult Bible class at my church using a dynamic equivalence translation without checking the original language at every verse. I would never know what words to trust and what words have been left out. Nor can I lead our home fellowship group using a dynamic equivalence translation. People have sometimes brought the New Living Translation or The Message to a Bible study and I've seen them get excited about seeing some new ideas in a verse, but I have to bite my tongue because I know that the new idea they see in the verse is not there in the Greek and Hebrew text. I don't want to discourage their exciting about contributing to the Bible study, but I just wish they would get excited about something that is actually the Word of God." Wayne Grudem, "Are Only Some Words of Scripture Breathed Out by God?", Ref-0786, 19:56, p. 49. At Galatians 6:16, the NIV interprets the kai as oppositional which leans toward Replacement Theology.

The NKJV committee decided to base their work on the Greek manuscripts that were used by the original KJV translators in 1611 instead of taking into account the thousands of older and more reliable Greek manuscripts that archaeologist have discovered in the nearly 400 years since that time. No point of doctrine is affected, but it does affect many details of many verses, and that manuscript decision means that the NKJV will never become the standard English version used by the vast majority of New Testament scholars and seminary-trained pastors around the world." Wayne Grudem, "Are Only Some Words of Scripture Breathed Out by God?", Ref-0786, 19:56, p. 50n18.

"Many fanciful ideas have been proposed . The rabbis said Ham castrated Noah, thus explaining why Noah had no other sons. Others claim that Ham slept with his mother, thus uncovering his father's nakedness, and that Canaan was the offspring of that union. Others have said that Ham was involved in a homosexual attack on his father." Allen P. Ross, "Genesis" in Ref-0038. However, the verb form in Gen. 9:21 is reflexive ("uncovered himself," NASB, NET, HCSB, TNK). Also, the reaction of the brothers (walking backwards) implies that simple nakedness was the issue. It is unlikely that Canaan could have been the offspring of an indecent act because the text implies that Noah cursed Canaan as soon as he awoke (Gen. 9:24-25)--not some 9 months later. All of these ideas lack any support from the text. Most likely, they reflect the greater laxity in our own culture in comparison with that time--interpreters have difficulty accepting the simple explanation that nakedness was a serious issue because we live in such a promiscuous society. But, given the relative proximity of The Fall (where nakedness was a huge issue), it seems likely that nakedness was a very serious moral issue at the time of Noah and earlier (not to mention up to the time of the giving of the law at Sinai and beyond).

P. Vannutelli, Libri Synoptici Veteris Testamenti [1931]; A. Bendavid, Parallels in the Bible [1969]). Since few of these passages are identical throughout, one must account for instances where they diverge. Some of the variants can no doubt be explained by the different literary contexts of the passages; such have little text-critical relevance. Others, however, are more likely explained as witnesses to variant textual traditions. This is probably the case with the proper names in the historical books that include the abhorred name ba'al (Baal). In Chronicles the names appear with the ba'al form, whereas in the parallel passages of Samuel/Kings they are found with the more acceptable substitute bo'e? ("shame")." S. K. "Origen also taught that the church was the new Israel. In his debate with Celcus, for example, Origen stated, "Our Lord, seeing the conduct of the Jews not to be at all in keeping with the teaching of the prophets, inculcated by a parable that the kingdom of God would be taken from them, and given to the converts from heathenism." N. R. M. De Lange summarizes Origen's supersessionist perspective: "Crucial to the whole argument [of Origen] is the paradox that Jews and Gentiles suffer a reversal of roles. The historical Israelites cease to be Israelites, while the believers from the Gentiles become the New Israel. This involves a redefinition of Israel." . . . In line with supersessionist theology, Augustine explicitly stated that the title "Israel" belonged to the Christian church: "For if we hold with a firm heart the grace of God which hath been given us, we are Israel, the seed of Abraham . . . Let therefore no Christian consider himself alien to the name of Israel." He also said, "The Christian people then is rather Israel." " Michael J. None of these nations can make a historical claim to certain borders on the basis of antiquity -- and certainly neither can the Palestinians." Ref-0160, p. 155. Palestine - origin : Philistines - origin ☺ Palestine - name given by Roman emperor Hadrian after the second Jewish revolt under

Bar Cochba (A.D. 132-135) for the purpose of erasing any Jewish remembrance of the land as part of his policy to de-judaize the land. Not so named in scripture. "The Romans called the new province Judaea because the Jews were the majority of the population. Its official Roman name would not be Palaestina until the reign of Hadrian in the second century, though that name was often used in the first century by Greek writers and by Jews like the philosopher Philo and the historian Josephus, both of whom wrote in Greek." Ref-0150, p. 266. "[After the Bar Kochba revolt] [t]he Romans banned the name 'Judaea,' which was derived from the Latin word for 'Jewish'; henceforth, the province was to be known as 'Syria-Palaestina,' the second word being a reference to the Philistines who had once inhabited the coastal strip but had long since disappeared. The name Palaestina, or Palestine, has lasted until the twentieth century - a name that is, in itself, a negation of the Jewish right to the Holy Land." Ref-0152, p. 51. "At this time [1947] the term Palestine (the Anglicized form of the Latin name of Israel's ancient enemies, the Philistines), was applied equally to both the Jewish and Arab populations. For example, the well-known English language newspaper The Jerusalem Post was then called The Palestine Post." Ref-0160, p. 109. "The term Palestinian(s) does not appear in the foundational documents related to resolving the Arab-Israeli conflicts of the 1967 Six-Day War and the 1973 Yom Kippur War (Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338). Such an omission tells us that at that time, the Arabs described in these resolutions were not thought of as Palestinians." Ref-0160, p. 138. "in interviews with the Arab press in 1981 and 1984, the late King Hussein. . . stated, 'The truth is that Jordan is Palestine and Palestine is Jordan.' Yasser Arafat has stated the same thing: 'What you call Jordan is actually Palestine.'" Ref-0160, p. 142. See also: Ref-0160, pp. 132-143. "Although Emperor Hadrian renamed Jerusalem as Aelia Capitolina and the land of Israel as Syria Palestina, or Palestine in A.D. 135, I generally prefer the more historic 'land of Israel,' and related Hebrew titles. This is more than a matter of ancient semantics. Contrary to widespread misunderstanding, as Bernard Lewis has explained, "From the end of the Jewish state in antiquity to the beginning of British rule, the area now designated by the name Palestine was not a country and had no frontiers, only administrative boundaries; it was a group of provincial subdivisions, by no means always the same, within a larger entity. With the British conquest in 1917-18 and the subsequent establishment of a mandated territory in the conquered areas, Palestine became the official name of a definite territory for the first time since the Middle Ages. To begin with, this designation was acceptable neither to Jews nor to Arabs. From the Jewish point of view . . . the very associations . . . were hateful. . . . For Arabs, . . . there was no such thing as a country called Palestine. The region which the British called Palestine was merely a separated part of a larger whole. For a long time organized and articulate Arab political opinion was virtually unanimous at this point." James Parkes made the same point even more comprehensively: "During all this period of two thousand years, Palestine was not even a name on the political map of the world. It was a portion of a larger province, whether Roman, Byzantine, Arab or Turkish; and its people were never conscious of themselves as a national unit, nor did they ever attempt, as they had done in early and later Israelite days, to form an independent kingdom. During the long period of Islamic rule, with its kaleidoscopic changes of dynasty, no claimant to the throne for the caliphs, or even to a separate identity, ever merged from the Palestinian population. It was the alternative prey of dynasties ruling from Damascus, Baghdad, Cairo or Istanbul. Only in the twentieth century has it resumed a separate identity, and that by the will of outsiders rather than of the majority of its own population; and the result has been conflict, uncertainty and one of the most delicate and difficult problems of modern international politics." Ref-1263, p. 108 "The name Palestine derives from Hebrew peleštīm, translated in the Old Testament as philistines, appearing for the first time in Genesis 21:32 in the time of Abraham (ca. 2060 B.C.). It is a name used for peoples originating from Crete (=Caphtor in the OT; Jer. 47:4; Amos 9:7). In early 12th century B.C. Egyptian texts the name pelset is applied to one of the groups of Sea Peoples who migrated from the Aegean to the eastern Mediterranean coast. At that time the peleštīm/pelset group settled in the southwest coastal area of Canaan, thus the region became known as pelešēt, Philistia (Ps. 60:8; 87:4; 108:9). The Assyrian king Sargon II (721-705 B.C.) referred to the area as Palasshtu or Pilistu in his annals. In the fifth century B.C. the Greek historian Herodotus wrote of a "district of Syria called Palaistinê," from which came the names Palaestina and Palestine. Following the suppression of the Bar Kokhba revolt in the second century A.D., the Romans replaced the name Provincia Judaea for the region with Syria Palaestina, which was shortened to Palaestina/Palestine. The name continued in use through the Byzantine (A.D. 324-638) and Arab (A.D. 638-1516) periods, then fell out of use in the Ottoman period (A.D. 1516-1917), when the Turks named the province after various ruling capitals. The name was revived by the British after the fall of the Ottoman Empire and applied to the territory placed under British Mandate between the Mediterranean and the Jordan River. Since the establishment of the modern State of Israel in 1948, the term Palestinian has been employed for Arab-speaking peoples of the area, including Muslims, Christians, Druze and Samaritans. Modern Palestinians descend from a mixture of the ancient inhabitants and those who have settled in the region since." Bryant G. Wood, We Hear You!, Ref-0066, 23.4 (2010), 86-87, pp. 86-87.

parable - ten virgins : Mtt. 25:1-13 ❖ "The Jewish ritual of the wedding ceremony gives the proper background for understanding the parable. First, the parents arranged the marriage. Second, the betrothal period took place to test whether the marital parties would maintain their virginity. Third, the groom and his friends would travel to the bride's home. Fourth, the marriage ceremony would transpire at the bride's home. Fifth, the bridesmaids would travel to the bridegroom's home to await the return of the couple. Thus, the bridesmaids prepared in advance by bringing sufficient oil for their lamps to await this event. Sixth, the marriage festival would last seven days. Seventh, the marriage would be consummated." Andy Woods, "The Purpose of Matthew's Gospel, Part II", Ref-0785, Volume 11 Number 34 December 2007, 5:42, p. 35n76.

When the feast was almost prepared, the call to those who had been invited was issued (Mtt. 22:3) This call probably portrays the ministries of John the Baptist and the Lord Jesus. But Israel was "unwilling to come" (v.

3). The next invitation to the nation (v. 9) was given by the apostles both before and after the Lord's crucifixion, and their invitation too was rejected by many. The call to go to the "main highways" refers to the message going to the Gentiles." Stanley D. Toussaint and Jay Q. ANSWER: The answer to this question is both yes and no. It should be kept in mind that there is a distinction between the first night of Passover and the first day of Passover. It is on the first night of Passover that all the Jewish families eat the Passover meal, and Yeshua (Jesus) ate His last Passover meal on the first night of Passover. That is when He

inaugurated the communion service. The next morning was the first day of Passover, and at nine o'clock in the morning there was a special Passover sacrifice of which only the priesthood could eat. Yeshua was nailed to the cross on the first day of Passover at nine o'clock in the morning, which was the same time that the special Passover sacrifice was being offered up. ... Yeshua set Himself aside as the Passover Lamb. It occurred on the tenth day of the month, the same day that the physical animal was set aside. From the tenth day until the fourteenth day of the month, Yeshua was tested by the Pharisees, by the Sadducees, by the Scribes, and by the Herodians. By answering all of their objections and questions, He showed that He was without spot and without blemish. Yeshua ate the Seder meal on the fourteenth of Nisan, the first night of the Passover, the same night that all the Jewish people ate it. Yeshua died on the first day of Passover. He was crucified at nine o'clock in the morning, and it was at nine o'clock in the morning that the special Passover sacrifice was offered in the Temple compound." "Scripture is quite clear that these descriptive titles relate to the same pastoral office. The terms elder and bishop are synonymous in Acts 20:17,28 and Tit. 1:5-7. The terms elder, bishop, and shepherd are synonymous in 1Pe. 5:1-2. The leadership role of elders is also evident in the shepherdly activity of Jas. 5:14. As clearly noted by Lightfoot, in biblical times elder and bishop were synonymous terms." Ref-0052, p. 39. The elders of Acts 20:17 are called bishops in Acts 20:28 and are to shepherd the church of God. "Overseers and deacons are called to lead the church. As is clear from Acts 20:17, 28 and Titus 1:5,7, overseer is another term for elder, the most common New Testament name for the office (cf. Acts 11:30; 14:23; 15:2, 4, 6, 23; James 5:14). Elders are also referred to as pastors (or shepherds; Acts 20:28; 1 Peter 5:1-2), pastor-teachers (Eph. 4:11), and bishops (cf. Acts 20:28, marg.; 1 Tim. 3:2, marg.)." Ref-0188, p. 14. "Paul provides another line of Scriptural evidence that the position of elder, overseer, and pastor are one and the same. In 1 Timothy Paul disclosed the qualifications of the "overseer" (1Ti. 3:1-7). In introducing the qualifications of the "overseer" he uses the Greek word episkopos in verse 2. However in 1Ti. 5:17 Paul uses the word presbuteros when he speaks of those who rule the church. Thus he alternates from episkopos in chapter 3 to presbuteros in chapter 5, demonstrating once again the correlation of the term elder and overseer. Paul also utilizes these words in a similar fashion in his epistle to Titus. Once again the context is the qualifications of "elders" (Tit. 1:5-16). Paul says in verse 5, "For this reason I left you in Crete, that you would set in order what remains and appoint elders [presbuteros] in every city as I directed you." In verse 7 thought, Paul switches to the term episkopos when he writes, "For the overseer must be above reproach as God's steward." Again, Paul is equating the position of elder and overseer. Paul is not alone in equating these terms. Peter does likewise. In his first epistle Peter talks about the duty of an "elder." He writes, "Therefore, I exhort the elders among you" (1Pe. 5:1). The word "elder" here is presbuteros. In continuing his exhortation Peter tells the elders to "shepherd the flock of God." "Shepherd" is poimaino. Thus Peter equates "elder" with the one who pastors. Further, in 1 Peter. 2:25 Peter refers to Christ as "the Shepherd and Guardian of your souls." "Shepherd" is ποιμεν and "Guardian" is Overseer." These are two good pieces of wisdom." Richard L. Mayhue, "Editorial", Ref-0167 Volume 17 Number 1, Spring 2006, 1:5, p. 2. "According to a recent poll, twenty years ago the average pastor stayed in his ministry at least seven years before transitioning elsewhere. Today the tenure is less than five years. In times past, the longevity of men like John Calvin (25 years in Geneva until he died), Charles Simeon (over 50 years in Cambridge), John Stott (over 50 years in London), Jonathan Edwards (in Northampton for over 20 years), and D. Martyn Lloyd-Jones (in London for nearly 30 years) was the rule, and not the exception. More recently, W. A. Criswell pastored in downtown Dallas for nearly 50 years and Adrian Rogers in Memphis for 32 years. Others have demonstrated endurance serving a single congregation, but they are rare these days." The sarcophagus, which lay hidden for centuries, had a hole into which the faithful could stick pieces of cloth to make secondary relics, said Giorgio Filippi, the archeologist and inscriptions expert at the atican Museums who carried out the studies. The tombe lies directly beneath a historic inscription that reads: "Paul Apostle Martyr." The marble sarcophagus was apparently first placed there during reconstruction of the basilica in A.D. 390. . . . Tradition holds that St. Paul suffered martyrdom by beheading in the first century, and that his body was buried in a cemetery along the Via Ostiense, where the basilica was built. A church was first erected there in A.D. 320, and a larger basilica was constructed in 390; it was remodeled several times over the centuries and almost totally destroyed by fire in 1823." - John Thavis, Peleg - division : Gen. 10:25 ☪ "Division".

Dispersion of tower of Babel or possibly continental drift? "There are problems with equating the Peleg "division" with that of Babel. A minor consideration is that, in order to have influenced his parents' choice of a name for him, the "division" - whatever it was - had to have already begun BEFORE, not after, Peleg's birth. It does not make sense that his parents would have waited until little Peleg was five years old before naming him! This strikes a logical blow at Ussher's dating of the Babel dispersion as five years after his birth. More significant is that, if we accept the genealogy of Shem in Luke 3:35-36, which includes the mention of Cainan, as correct - though differing from the Masoretic (Hebrew) text, it matches the Alexandrian Septuagint (Greek) version - then we clearly have Peleg in the FIFTH generation after the Flood (Shem > The Flood > Arphaxad > Cainan > Shelah > Eber > Peleg). Those who allege that the division in Peleg's day was that of Babel overlook the glaring inconsistency that the Babel event took place in the SECOND generation of the descendants of Japheth. Genesis 10:5 notes that from the sons of Javan, son of Japheth, "the coastlands of the nations were separated into their lands, every one according to his language. . ." (NASB). Since there was a universal language until Babel, we can pinpoint the language division as occurring in the second generation of Japhethites. But we must jump three generations forward to the fifth generation of Semites before we come to Peleg's division. Accounting for long human life spans at the time, plus a general equivalence in the timing of the generations following Noah's three sons (all childless while aboard the Ark), this means approximately 200 years separate the Babel and Peleg divisions. Thus, we must conclude they are NOT the same, and that one division is of languages, and the second, later one is of the earth itself - of the primeval single landmass. They cannot be one and the same event. There are also etymological considerations based on Peleg's name, which I cannot go into in this article, which strongly indicate the Peleg division involved water." Richard Lanser, Of Peleg and Pangaea, ABR ELECTRONIC NEWSLETTER Vol. 6, Issue 4, April 2006 [<http://biblearchaeology.org>] "The "Trilithon" in the Temple of Jupiter at Baalbek, Lebanon. These three stones are the largest building blocks in the world, each measuring 70 ft (21.5 m) long, 14 ft (4.3 m) high and 10 ft (3.1 m) thick, and weighing around 800 tons (726,000 kg). The shared knowledge, by people now widely separated, of how to move and precisely place such huge stones, is easier to understand if their geographical separation did not take place until after the Babel event." Richard D. Lanser, Making Sense of the Days of Peleg, Ref-0066, 22.2 (2009), 51:64, p. 51. "... sedimentary rocks all over the world, though maintaining their clear layering, display the action of deforming forces. Folds and faults are seen in road cuts and quarries; jagged mountains reveal sedimentary layers twisted and thrust out of the horizontal plane they must have originally lain in. It stands to reason that, whatever the powerful forces were that deformed the sedimentary strata deposited by Noah's Flood, they had to have acted sufficiently long after the Flood for the layers to have had time to firm up and maintain their integrity during deformation. This is an important observation! That the layers remain distance, rather than slumping and mixing during the tectonic activity, indicates the time of this great tectonic activity was NOT at the time of the Flood, but later." "[A]fter the Ten Commandments in Exodus 20 and Deuteronomy 5, the Samaritan Pentateuch inserts a long passage, commanding that the Israelites build an altar on Mount Gerizim. In Deuteronomy 27:4, instead of Mount Ebal the Samaritan Pentateuch reads Mount Gerizim. With such views it is not surprising that the Samaritans rejected the rest of the Old Testament, which often praises Jerusalem and Zion." Ref-0236, p. 142. "There are discrepancies between the Samaritan Pentateuch and that of the Hebrew. For example, the editor(s) who produced this ancient document from the older Hebrew Text apparently felt that the antediluvians were not likely to have lived 150 years or so without begetting any sons. Accordingly, the ages in which several of these Patriarchs fathered, as well as the total length of their lives, has been reduced by a century such that the span from the creation to the Deluge is 349 years shorter than recorded in the Hebrew Text.

Contrariwise, the interval from the Flood to Abraham's departure from Haran into the land of Caanan is 490 years longer in the Samaritan Pentateuch than the values recorded in the Masoretic Hebrew Test. Moreover, the Samaritan text differs in matters of varying significance from the Masoretic Text in about 6,000 places." Ref-0186, p. 11. "The temple was built on Gerizim. The Pentateuch was forced to give its support to the new Zion. And to this day "the foolish people that dwell in Sichem" as the Son of Sirach (50:26) calls them, though insignificant in numbers, have continued to maintain a separate existence. In all these centuries, moreover, they have lost none of their capacity for groundless assertions, or their superstitious reverence for Gerizim. Heaven, as they claim, lies directly over or near this spot. Here Adam built his first altar, and was himself made from its sacred earth. Here the ark rested after the flood, for it is the real Ararat of the Bible, and the exact place is shown where Noah disembarked and offered thankful sacrifices. Here, too, Abraham brought his son Isaac as a burnt-offering to the Lord, and here as well, strange to say, the patriarch Jacob on his way to Padan-Aram found his Bethel and dreamed sweet dreams of heaven." Bissell in Lange, J. P., Schaff, P., & Bissell, E. C. (2008). A commentary on the Holy Scriptures : Apocrypha (8). Bellingham, WA: Logos Research Systems, Inc. "The Samaritans acknowledge no Scriptures save the five books of Moses, and these they hold in an edition that is significantly different from that of the Jews. Some scholars argue that the Samaritan text represents an independent tradition which may, in part, better represent the original than does the Masoretic text of the Jews. In spite of the agreement of some Dead Sea Scroll fragments with the Samaritan version, however, the best evidence seems to indicate that the Samaritans produced their Pentateuch in the second century B.C. to give legitimacy to their theological views and practices."¹¹ [11] This is an involved technical issues. Bruce K. Waltke, "Samaritan Pentateuch," in Anchor Bible Dictionary, ed. David Noel Freedman, 6 vols. (New York: Doubleday, 1992), 5:932-940, provides an excellent survey and bibliography." The term Dispersion [διασπορά] is a technical Jewish term for Jews who live outside the land. It is used twice elsewhere: John 7:35 and James 1:1, which all commentators agree refers to the Jews of the Diaspora. There is no reason to make 1 Peter the exception since it fits well into Peter's calling as the Apostle to the Circumcision (Gal. 2:7-8). Furthermore, Peter keeps making reference to the fact that his readers live among the Gentiles (1Pe. 2:12; 4:3). While many try to make the term Gentiles mean 'unbelievers,' that is neither its Jewish usage nor even New Testament usage as a simple look in a concordance will show. Peter is using the term Gentile in its normal usage as meaning 'non-Jew.'" Ref-0009, p. 720. "Wayne Grudem concludes his comment with this rhetorical question: 'What more could be needed in order to say with assurance that the church has now become the true Israel of God?' . . . In considering the apostle's transposition of the titles of honor used by the prophet Hosea (Hosea 2:23; cf. 1:6, 9-10) to the Church, it must be remembered that Christian Jews were among the addressees to whom the letter was written (1 Peter 1:1-2; cf. Galatians 2:8-9). For these Jewish Christians, the words of Hosea would have had much the same meaning as they had for the Israelites of Hosea's own time. The name Lo-Ammi (Hosea 1:9), meaning 'not my people,' stood for a severing of the covenant relationship between God and Israel through Israel's acting like an unfaithful wife. However, God's faithfulness toward unfaithful Israel meant that there was a future for the nation." Ref-0685, pp. 49-50.

Pharisee - meaning : John 7:47-49 ☪ "The root meaning of "Pharisee" is uncertain. It is probably related to the Hebrew word parash and Aramaic perash (one who separates). From whom did the Pharisees separate? From those, especially priests and clerics, whose interpretation of the law was different from theirs? From the common people of the land (John 7:47-49)? From Gentiles or Jews who embraced Hellenistic culture? Or from certain political groups? All these would be included in the Pharisees' determination to separate themselves from the types of impurity proscribed by Levitical law or, more specifically, by their strict understanding of it. Another explanation suggests that "Pharisee" is a nickname derived from a Grecianized form of "Persian"; the Pharisees' opponents used it in accusing them of introducing foreign (especially Iranian) doctrines into Judaism." The second box is placed against the forehead, centered between the eyes, and its straps are knotted at the back of the head. pierced - hands : Ps. 22:16; Mtt. 27:35 ☩ "The reading which best explains the variants is to be preferred. For example, Ps. 22:16 (Mtt. 22:17) reads K'RY YDY WRGLY, which, as pointed by the Masoretes. . . means ?like the lion my hands and my feet'. . . The Hebrew column in the Complutensian Polyglot reads K'RW, vocalized as Ka'RuW, which means 'they have bored through.' Which reading best explains the variants (in this case, the reading in the versions)? Probably the second reading, for the LXX, the Peshitta, the Vulgate, and even Jerome's Hebrew Psalter all read, 'They have dug through' or 'pierced.'" Ref-0001, p. 65. "In Psalm 22:16 the Masoretic text and the Targum read "Like a lion my hands and my feet," which makes little or no sense. Some Hebrew manuscripts, plus the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac, read "they pierced My hands and My feet," which makes perfect sense in this psalm.⁶ [6] Since the Masoretes were post-Christian in time, one is tempted to wonder if the text was changed on purpose to avoid a strong messianic prophecy of the crucifixion." Pilate - inscription : Luke 3:1 ☉ Pilate's official residence was the Mediterranean seaboard city of Caesarea Maritima. In 1961, during Italian-sponsored excavations at Caesarea's Roman theater, a stone plaque bearing Pilate's name was discovered. postmillennialism - seven aspects : ☉ + "First, postmillennialism "understands the Messianic kingdom to have been founded upon the earth during the earthly ministry and through the redemptive labors of the Lord Jesus Christ. . . . The Church becomes the transformed Israel." Second, "the fundamental nature of that kingdom is essentially redemptive and spiritual . . . Christ rules His kingdom spiritually and in and through His people in the world (representation), as well as by His universal providence." Third, Christ's "kingdom will exercise a transformational socio-cultural influence in history. This will occur as more and more people are converted to Christ." Fourth, "postmillennialism, thus, expects the gradual, developmental expansion of the kingdom of Christ in time and on earth . . . Christ's personal presence on earth is not needed for the expansion of His kingdom." Fifth, "postmillennialism confidently anticipates a time in earth history (continuous with the present) in which the very gospel already operative in the world will have won the victory throughout the earth in fulfillment of the Great Commission. . . . During that time the overwhelming majority of men and nations will be Christianized, righteousness will abound, wars will cease, and prosperity and safety will flourish." Sixth, there are "two types of postmillennialism today: pietistic and theonomic postmillennialism. . . . Pietistic postmillennialism . . . denies that the postmillennial advance of the kingdom involves the total transformation of culture through the application of biblical law. Theonomic postmillennialism affirms this." Seventh, "possibly 'we can look forward to a great "golden age" of spiritual prosperity continuing for centuries, or even for millenniums, . . . After this . . . earth history will be drawn to a close by the personal, visible, bodily return of Jesus Christ (accompanied by a literal resurrection and a general judgment) to introduce His . . . consummative and eternal form of the kingdom.'" Gentry, Jr., He Shall Have Dominion: A Postmillennial Eschatology (Tyler, TX: Institute for Christian Economics, 1992), pp. 70-73, cited by Thomas Ice, "What is Postmillennialism?", Ref-0181, vol. 8 no. 13 May 2004, pp. 3-5.

postmodernism - relativism - ambiguity : ☉ + “Postmodernism in general is marked by a tendency to dismiss the possibility of any sure and settled knowledge of the truth.

Postmodernism suggests that if the objective truth exists, it cannot be known objectively or with any degree of certainty. That is because (according to postmodernists), the subjectivity of the human mind makes knowledge of objective truth impossible. So it is useless to think of truth in objective terms. Objectivity is an illusion. Nothing is certain, and the thoughtful person will never speak with too much conviction about anything. Strong convictions about any point of truth are judged supremely arrogant and hopelessly naive. Everyone is entitled to his own truth.” Ref-0789, pp. 10-11 postmodernism - relativism - convenient :

☉ + “The goal of human philosophy used to be truth without God. Today’s philosophies are open to the notion of god without truth -- or to be more accurate, personal “spirituality” in which everyone is free to create his or her own god. Personal gods pose no threat to sinful self-will, because the suit each sinner’s personal preferences anyway, and they make no demands on anyone else.” Ref-0789, p. 8.

postmodernism - relativism - intolerant : ☉

+ “The one essential, non-negotiable demand that postmodernism makes on everyone is this: No one is supposed to think he or she knows any objective truth. Because postmodernists often suggest that every opinion should be shown equal respect, it seems (on the surface) to be drive by a broad-minded concern for harmony and tolerance, which sounds very charitable and altruistic. But what really underlies the postmodernist belief system is an utter intolerance for every worldview that makes any universal truth-claims -- particularly biblical Christianity.” John MacArthur, “The Perspicuity of Scripture: The Emergent Approach” Ref-0164, Volume 17 Number 2 Fall 2006, 141:158, p. 149. “The belief that no one can really know anything for certain is emerging as virtually the one dogma postmodernists will tolerate. Uncertainty is the new truth. Doubt and skepticism have been canonized as a form of humility. Right and wrong have been redefined in terms of subjective feelings and personal perspectives.” Ref-0789, p. 16 posttribulationism - church fathers : ☉ +

“Although some pretribs may be unwilling to concede that the early church fathers were generally posttribulationist in their eschatology, it can hardly be denied that some, if not most of them were. Crutchfield makes this admission: ‘Some of the fathers, Hippolytus, Tertullian, Lactantius, and others, clearly have posttribulationist elements in their views concerning the end times.’ Erickson states: ‘there are in these writings some clearly posttribulationist expressions.’ And Walvoord concedes that while ‘all of the early fathers are not clear on the question, some of them were posttribulationist.’ Steven L. potter - vs. clay : Isa. 29:16; Isa. 41:25; Isa. 45:8-9; Isa. 64:8; Jer. 18:4; Jer. 18:6; Jer. 48:38 (?); Lam. 4:2; Dan. 2:33-34; Dan. 2:41-43; Dan. 2:45; Rom. 9:21 ☉ “Who, then, is symbolized by ‘the clay’ [Dan. 2:33-34]?

Here we are obliged to part company with the commentators, who unanimously take the clay to be the figure of democracy. So far as we are aware none of them has offered a single proof text in support of their interpretation, and as the Word is the only authority, to it we must look. Assured that Scripture is its own interpreter, we turn to the concordance to find out what the ‘clay’ signifies elsewhere, when used symbolically. In Isa. 64, which records the Cry of the Remnant at the End-time, we find them saying, ‘But now, O Lord, Thou art our Father; we are the clay, and Thou our Potter; and we are all the work of Thy hand.’ Again, in Jer. 18 the same figure is employed. There the prophet is commanded to go down to the potter’s house, where he beheld him manufacturing a vessel. The vessel was marred in the hands of the potter, so he ‘made it again another vessel.’ Clearly, this is a picture of Israel in the past and in the future. The interpretation is expressly fixed in Jer. 18:6: ‘O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter’s hand, so are ye in Mine hand, O house of Israel.’ How clear it is then that ‘clay’ is God’s symbol for Israel.” Ref-0215, “Israel and the Antichrist”. prayer - USA - first continental congress : ☪ + "Historically, the first prayer offered at the continental Congress in Philadelphia was prayed by Rev. Jacob Duch?, on September 7, 1774. Interestingly, Rev. Duch?'s prayer was offered in Jesus' name. This was the last part of that prayer: 'Be Though present; oh God of Wisdom, and direct the councils of this Honorable Assembly: enable them to settle all things on the best and surest of foundations: that the scene of blood may be speedily closed: that order, Harmony and Peace may be effectually restored, and Truth, and Justice, Religion, and piety prevail and flourish among the people. Preserver the health of their bodies and the vigor of their minds, shower down on them, and the millions they here represent, such temporal Blessings as Thou seest expedient for them in this world, and crown them with everlasting Glory in the word to come. All this we ask in the name and through the merits of Jesus Christ They Son and Our Savior. Amen.'" What must question, however, is this: is our age ever going to accept monologue again? Does it not seem that our generation is demanding, and insisting on having, the right of talk-back? From the theological point of view, it does not seem any more difficult to me for the Spirit to be operative in dialogue than in monologue . . . One way communication may well have been sufficient in the past. Nowadays there is feed-back, and right of reply, and letters to the editor: must the preacher be the sole exception to the general trend?' Ref-0935, p. 620.

predestination - AGAINST double : Rom. 9:21-23 ☪ The lump of clay in Rom. 9:21 is already judged and deserving of hell due to its innate nature (Rom. 3:9-19). God then chooses a piece from the lump which is prepared beforehand (Rom. 9:23) for glory, whereas the rest of the clay he endured with much longsuffering (Rom. 9:22). Double predestination assumes that the vessels prepared for destruction in v. 22 were prepared beforehand -- something the text only states of those who are saved. The verb "prepared" or "fitted" κατηρτισμενα in Rom. 9:22 is a perfect passive participle meaning "to equip." The vessels of wrath were prepared, but not necessarily by God. No specific agent is here associated with the preparation. "1. Prov. 16:4 involves an important theological decision. Namely, do we interpret God's "making" of the wicked as a supralapsarian act of the will whereby God just decides to create certain millions of humans for the "purpose" of damning them eternally? If so, one must embrace supralapsarianism in the logical order, which has God decreeing to damn those He has yet not decreed to create ? thus meaning there were two separate humanities (saved and lost) in the mind of God from the offset. That is both a heavy theological weight for the verse to hold up, and it creates real problems for a theodicy. First, it means God is the Author of sin (He "Creates the WICKED?"). Second, it means God is, to all appearances, cruel and arbitrary (He creates in order to damn). The verse so interpreted includes no secondary causes, nor indeed would it require them (since they would serve no apologetic purpose). Therefore, the verse should not be interpreted this way. Instead, the "wicked" are "purposed" for "destruction" because they are wicked! The wicked ones are already living out their wickedness before God and thus invite upon themselves the wrath of God. This preserves the poetic balance of the passage, with the second refrain answering the first, and it preserves the proverbial character too. God does not make wicked people in the sense that He forms people with evil hearts in order to later send them to Hell. Rather, He makes the wicked serve His purposes with regard to the "day of evil." The verse is not a proof for reprobation, and if it is taken as such the fallout is massive. 2. 1 Peter 2:18 again deals with those who stumbled because they would not believe. They were THERE to stumble and their doom was in consequence of their act. A person is appointed to destruction as a consequence of their own sin ("disobedient" v.7). 3. The Romans 9 passage is a favorite for the teaching of reprobation, but it is quite otherwise. First, please note that both elect and reprobate come from "the same lump" (9:21). This overthrows supralapsarian schemes and nullifies the impact of Prov. 16:4 as a proof-text for reprobation. Both groups are part of the one humanity! Second, your use of vv.15-18 ignores Paul's argument in the epistle. I always tell students "you cannot understand Rom.9 unless you understand Rom.1? What I mean is that Rom. 9 cannot be used in such a way that it renders null and void Paul's crucial argument in Rom. 1:18-32. In Romans 1 Paul plainly says that all men are guilty and without excuse for their rejection of God's [General] revelation. Bring that into his argument in Romans 9 and one sees straight away that Paul is not saying, "God can do what He wants whether it is right or not because He is God," but "God has a perfect right to elect some and not others because we're all wicked God-rejectors in the first place, so be quiet." Pharaoh is a case in point. God raised him up (meaning that He brought him to prominence for His own purposes, not that He created him to damn him). In v. 22 God is said to "endure with much longsuffering" these non-elect. If He created them to damn them what "longsuffering" would there be worthy of the term? No, the wrath of God comes upon all those who "suppress the truth in unrighteousness." God puts up with them and often uses them to His purposes. That is what Paul is arguing in Romans 9. There is no doctrine of "double predestination" there. Rom. 11:8 again refers to those who are already guilty of rejecting revelation. Thus, God's active hardening or active "stupification" of unbelievers answers to their sin. 3. Your reference to James 1:13-15 only works if you reject preterition, not embrace it. You yourself point out that Rom.9:18 has God actively and IN PERSON hardening the non-elect. There is no secondary causation! Neither is there any in Proverbs 16:4! You cannot have your cake and eat it brother. If you want to make these texts teach reprobation you cannot appeal to secondary causation. The thing which causes men's damnation is their own rejection of God's revelation? general and special. This is what James is saying with regard to our sin. God has no hand in it. It is ours and God will punish it. Thank you for your stimulating inquiry. Whether you agree with my answer or not is another thing :) I believe these verses, if taken as proof-texts for reprobation, present insurmountable theological and philosophical problems, some of which I have tried to demonstrate." The substitutionary atonement of Christ, the Trinitarian nature of the Godhead, and many other [doctrines], are all truths that come from Scripture, but also truths that invite the attack of agnostics, atheists, humanists, and secularists. preterism - hyper : ☪ + "HP is the view that all biblical prophecy saw its fulfillment at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. It differs from the moderate form of preterism in terms of extent. Among other things, it teaches that (1) Christ has already returned and established His kingdom, (2) the resurrection of the just and unjust has occurred, (3) the final judgments have been pronounced at the Great White Throne, (4) Satan and his cohorts among men and the angelic realm have been cast into the lake of fire, and (5) Christians are now enjoying the new heavens and new earth." Dennis M. Swanson, "International Preterist Association: Reformation or Retrogression?", Ref-0164, 15/1 (Spring 2004) 39-58, p. 40. "Here is the problem that the HP position cannot wish away. As Gentry notes, "No creed allows for any second Advent in A.D. 70. No creed allows any other type of resurrection than a bodily one. Historic creeds speak of the universal personal judgment of men, not a representative judgment in A.D. 70." It is an indisputable fact that outside their own small group, they cannot point to a single denominational statement of faith, a single one of the great creedal statements in the history of Christianity, a single seminary or academic theological institution presently or in the past, that affirms the HP view on the return of Christ, the resurrection, and the judgments, and affirms that the new heavens and the new earth have been enjoyed by believers since A.D. 70." John uses two long chapters in addressing those churches regarding the implications of the coming of Christ for them. “Professor Richard Gardner of Oxford University, a renowned expert on human reproduction and an advisor to Britain’s Human Fertilization and Embryology Authority, recently raised the prospect of using organs from aborted fetuses for transplantation into adults. This possibility offers the potential to save or improve the lives of the hundreds of thousands of patients in desperate need of such organs throughout the world, especially the more than 70,000 in the United States waiting for kidneys. While such procedures have never been attempted in humans, research on mice has demonstrated that fetal kidneys develop quickly inside adult animals -- and according to Gardner, fetal-to-adult transplantation is "probably a more realistic technique in dealing with the shortage of kidney donors than others." If aborted fetuses do prove a useful source of organs for transplant, and there is hope to believe that they might, our society may soon have to grapple with the possibility of yet another controversial and startling -- yet potentially beneficial -- phenomenon: a legal market in fetal tissue and organs. Opponents of organ sales fear that transforming transplantation into a financial transaction will lead to exploitation of the poor, particularly in developing nations, and will expose the world's least fortunate inhabitants to unnecessary medical risks and to exchanges in which they lack equal bargaining power. The striking benefit of a legal trade in fetal organs, unlike adult organs, is that it may provide all of the benefits that supporters desire without resulting in the exploitative harms that opponents fear. Such sales could prove the rare economic transaction in the medical field in which all participating parties can truly be said to benefit. The first striking feature of fetal organs is that their supply, for all practical purposes, is unlimited. Unlike living kidney donors, who must then advance through life with only one functioning kidney, pregnant women who provide fetal kidneys could do so repeatedly without incurring the medical consequences of adult organ loss. Opponents of reproductive choice will object to such a market on the grounds that it will increase the number of abortions -- which will indeed be the logical result. However, such a market might also bring solace to women who have already decided upon abortion, but desire that some additional social good come from the procedure. Like the families of accident victims who donate the organs of their loved ones, these women could well find their decisions fortified by the public benefit that they generate. Someday, if we are fortunate, scientific research may make possible farms of artificial "wombs" breeding fetuses for their organs -- or even the "miracle" of men raising fetuses in their abdomens." Jacob M. Appel, Are We Ready for a Market in Fetal Organs?, Huffington Post, March 17, 2009. [http://www.huffingtonpost.com/jacob-m-appel/are-we-ready-for-a-market_b_175900.html] accessed 20091110. Jacob M. When they bought this particular piece of land, they also purchased the curse of Jeremiah that came with it. . . . fulfilled in 70 A.D." Ref-0011, p. 156. "Why does Matthew quote a prophecy from Zechariah and attribute it to Jeremiah? Actually Matthew quotes both Zechariah (Zec. 11:12-13) (thirty pieces of silver) and Jeremiah 18:1-4; 32:6-9 (purchase of the field). Matthew is more focused on the purchase of the field than he is the thirty pieces of silver. Also, Jeremiah is a major prophet. Thus, he only mentions Jeremiah's name. prophecy - purpose - Newton : ☆ + "He gave this and the prophecies of the Old Testament, not to gratify men's curiosities by enabling them to foreknow things, but that after they were fulfilled they might be interpreted by the event, and his own Providence, not the interpreters, be then manifested thereby to the world. For the event of things predicted many ages before will then be a convincing argument that the world is governed by providence." Ref-0849, pp. 251-252. There are numerous problems with Newton's view on prophecy. For one, God held man responsible for understanding in advance what numerous prophecies of Messiah's first coming were to point to. For another, if all God's prophecies will be understood after fulfillment, then they will hardly be convincing in that the fulfillment will appear to be contrived. The full power of prophetic prediction requires that some aspect of predictive understanding is conveyed before fulfillment. For example, the prophecy of the 1,000 year reign of Christ (Rev. 20) would hardly be glorifying to God if it actually does not pertain to what we think it does and is fulfilled by some other obscure mechanism in history. As but one example, consider Daniel 2:45, "The Great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the 'Dream' is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." Here Daniel asserts that prophecy was being given to king Nebuchadnezzar for him to understand. Yet king Nebuchadnezzar did not live to even see the subsequent kingdom (Medo-Persia) come onto the stage of history, not to mention all the rest of the prophecy beyond that. Yet the prophecy is said to be understandable and revealing in the time it was given.

prophecy - teaching - importance : ☆ + "Prophecy in itself is not crucial to orthodoxy or salvation. It should therefore never be made an issue determining the lines of fellowship among Christians. The dividing line among believers in matters of fellowship is the cardinal doctrines of the faith, not a particular system of eschatology. On the other hand, prophecy occupies such a sizable part of God's Word that it cannot remain for long in the side lines. Sooner or later, the teaching and preaching ministries of the church will encounter Bible prophecy. What then? There is no sadder scene than to see leaders within a church group giving forth uncertain or contradictory sounds. The seeds of confusion are soon sewn. A logical alternative under such a situation is to neglect or play down the significance of the prophetic Scripture, possibly by disclaiming full understanding of it this side of heaven. But by leaving such a large part of God's Word untouched or interpreted cursorily, church leaders will be feeding a partial diet to their flock. From the practical standpoint, therefore, a church group or Christian organization has the right -- indeed an obligation -- to assure uniformity among its leadership in at least the general scheme of prophecy. This has no relationship to the issue of orthodoxy or the question of fellowship among believers, which must be maintained regardless of prophetic interpretation. Yet when the leadership of the church is united in heart and spirit on the prophetic Scriptures, it affords Satan much less occasion to discount the Word of God in the church. The call for unity in the area of prophecy is the more pressing when one realizes that prophecy not only occupies a major portion of Scripture but tends to relate to almost all areas of God's Word. Prophecy is not confined to a specific portion of the Word. It extends its roots all over the Scripture. 'Eschatological interpretations have a definite bearing upon many of the other doctrines which one holds. One's entire system of theology, view of history, interpretation of Scripture, view of the Church as an organism and as an organization in relation to other organizations, and view of Biblical theology is determined to a great extent by his view of eschatology.' Verification of this view also comes from Josephus [Against Apion, 1.8]; the Talmud, which states, 'After the latter prophets Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, the Holy Spirit departed from Israel'; and from the New Testament, which never quotes a post-Malachi book as canonical. prosperity : Job 30:15; Ps. 1:3

prosperity - destroyed in : Dan. 8:25; Dan. 9:27; Rev. 6:2

prosperity - forgetting God in : Deu. 8:11-17; Deu. 31:20; Deu. 32:15; Pr. 30:9; Jer. 5:7; Hos. 4:7; Hos. 13:6; Luke 8:14 ♣ "Christianity, entering into the life of the individual, and thus into the life of the nation, is the only sure antidote for the poisonous touch of mere material prosperity." Ref-1275, [par. 734]. "One of the pressing dangers facing all civilized nations is the enervating influence of wealth and great material development. That was the one thing which sapped the life of the great nations of antiquity and buried them in the tombs of their own vices. In each there was a wonderful accumulation of wealth, marvelous manifestations of material splendor, but the moral character of their citizens was undermined thereby and they declined and fell. The hanging gardens of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, the sculptured beauty which lined the streets of Athens, and all that luxurious display which attended the centering in Rome of the products of the civilizations of the earth in their day provoked the admiration and were the boast of their citizens. They passed through the same round of experience. Wealth brought luxury, luxury brought vice and vice was followed by ruin and decay. And now we dig through the accumulating dust of centuries to find even the ruins of their vanished splendor." Ref-1275, [par. 703-708].

prosperity doctrine - AGAINST : Lev. 5:7; Mtt. 8:20; Luke 2:24; Luke 9:58; Rev. 2:9; Rev. 3:17 ♣ That Jesus' family was poor is evident by the offering of Luke 2:24 (cf. Lev. 5:7).

Pseudepigrapha : ☪ ("false writings") are religious compositions written under a false or unsubstantiated claim of authorship in the general era of the birth of Christ (200 B.C. to 200 A.D.). OT Pseudepigrapha were Jewish in origin and NT Pseudepigrapha of Christian origin. These books are called Apocrypha by the early Church and the modern Roman Catholic Church (which accepts the Protestant Apocrypha as canonical). For a list of the pseudepigraphal books, see Ref-1200, pp. 358-359.

Pul - Tiglath-Pileser III : 2K. 15:19-20; 2K. 15:29; 1Chr. 5:26 ☪ "The text in 1 Chronicles 5:26, "And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul king of Assyria, and the spirit of Tilgath-pileser king of Assyria, and he carried them away" (KJV) has often been cited as proof that the Bible supports the position that Pul and Tiglath-Pileser III were two individuals. It has been pointed out, however, that inasmuch as the Hebrew verb "carried" is here in the singular, as it is correctly translated with the singular pronoun "he," this verse definitely conveys the idea that Pul and Tiglath-Pileser were one and the same and that the correct translation of the waw introducing the epexegetical phrase concerning Tiglath-Pileser should be "even." Thus the verse would read "And the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul, king of Assyria, even the spirit of Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, and he carried them away." Most recent English translations give this verse correctly, recognizing that Pul and Tiglath-Pileser were the same individual. Among them are the NEB, NIV, NASB, MLB, and GNB." Ref-0839, pp. 139-140.

"Indisputable proof of their identity is provided by notations from a Babylonian king list and the Babylonian Chronicle where, in a list of the Babylonian kings Tiglath-Pileser appears by his usual Assyrian name on the one list and by his name Pulu on the other. . . ." Ref-0839, p. 141. "Most modern scholars insist that the Assyrian annals record Tiglath-pileser (III) as claiming to have received tribute from Menahem, King of Israel. This has led nearly all scholars to identify the Biblical "Pul" as being Tiglath-pileser (III) rather than his immediate predecessor as stated in the

Authorized Bible [1Chr. 5:26, KJB] . . . In order to "honor" the Assyrian data, the New King James translation alters this Scripture to read "So the God of Israel stirred up the spirit of Pul king of Assyria, that is, Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria. . . ." rather than the more correct word "and" as the King James faithfully records. . . . The continual assertion that the Annals of the Kings of Assyria record Tiglath-pileser (III) as claiming to have received tribute from Menahem is seen as false as the name "Menahem" appears in brackets meaning that the annals is unreadable and the word has been supplied by the translator. Thus, this identification rests solely upon conjecture. The rationale behind this supposition is to be found in the second Assyrian annals text which refers to the tribute of a "Menihimmu of Samerina" (Menahem of Samaria?). This fragmentary text has been assigned to Tiglath-pileser (III). Based on this data, the name "Menahem" was added and inserted in the bracket in the preceding text. . . . On the authority of the Hebrew Text, this author positively asserts that the second "slab" inscription has been wrongly assigned to Tiglath-pileser (III) whereas in truth it should be credited to an earlier Assyrian monarch whom the Biblical text calls "Pul" (Ashur-dan III). The testimony of the Hebrew Text unmistakably places Pul in the days of Menahem's reign (722-761 B.C.) and states that he extracted tribute from that King of Israel . . . 2K. 15:19-20." Ref-0186, pp. 177-179. ". . . the word "Pul" is a title, not a proper or forename. It means "Lord" and could therefore refer to any Assyrian ruler. . . . Moreover, even a casual glance at 1 Chronicles 5:26 reveals the obvious truth that Pul and Tiglath-pileser (III) are not the same man but two different Assyrian Monarchs; and with this Josephus completely occurs. If they were one and the same ruler, why does the title "king of Assyria" follow after both . . . ? Were they the same man, the verse would only have the title "king of Assyria" once . . . The redundancy, although not mentioned heretofore in the literature to our knowledge, is an unmistakable indication that we are dealing with two distinct monarchs - not one. . . . Therefore, when the New King James Version and nearly all others make Pul and Tiglath-pileser III one and the same person, such is not a translation, rather it is an interpretation based on a faulty archaeological argument." Puritans - arrival in America : ☪ + "Despite popular impressions, the English Puritans did not arrive first. Even in the territory that would become the United States, the Puritans were preceded by their near, but not very dear, fellow Englishmen, the state-church Episcopalians. Representatives of Holland's Reformed Church were also fairly well established in New Amsterdam (later New York) before the main body of Puritans first glimpsed Boston in 1630. Soon German-speaking believers of many types joined English Quakers in William Penn's Pennsylvania, Swedish Lutherans were in Delaware, and Presbyterians from Scotland and the north of Ireland had established a foothold on Long Island, in New Jersey, and in Pennsylvania. Even before the British Protestants had appeared on the scene, however, there was already a substantial Catholic presence in the New World. From Spain, Catholic priests has come to convert the Native Americans of the great Southwest. In what is now Canada and along the Mississippi River, Catholic missionaries from France were pursuing their work among Indians before missions by English Protestants had even made a start." Instantly the Pythia would enter in a manonion (mania), which was characterized by frantic and uncontrolled bodily movements and speaking in unknown tongues. As the Pythia went into here ecstatic and maniacal trance, a prophate (male prophet) would interpret and write down the oracle or prophecy of the Pythia. The wild and ecstatic manner in which these Pythia would receive the oracle did not always end well. Plutarch notes, one one occasion she died as a result of the violent agitation caused by the prophetic furor, due to the fact that the Pythia had entered the tripod against here will and was possessed by an "incoherent and evil inspiration" (Dempsey 1972: 68; Plutarch, Obsolescence of Oracles 438; LCL 5: 499)." Q - document - gospels : ☪ + "Now it is striking that the greater part of the non-Markan material common to Matthew and Luke consists of sayings of Jesus. This has led to the conjecture of another early document on which both Matthew and Luke drew for their common non-Markan material, the document usually referred to as ?Q' and envisaged as a collection of sayings of Jesus." Ref-0239, p. 34. "Incidentally, not one single fragment of the Q manuscript has ever been found, and there is also not one single reference by any apostolic father that suggests that Q ever existed. In addition, the assumption by some critical scholars that the sayings of Jesus only existed in oral form for decades before being written into Q, the canonical Gospels, or the Gnostic Gospel of Thomas, has nothing but critical textual theory to support it, and critical textual theories have a very poor track record when it comes to being right." "Over the years, this theory has become very popular, but it leaves many questions unanswered, such as James A Borland noted: "(1) Can it be proven that Mark predated Matthew and Luke? (2) Would Matt and Luke have been such plagiarists, or dependent on Mark that they had to copy almost verbatim so much of Mark? (3) Why did Luke omit some large sections of Mark? (4) Why is there no record or copy of the supposed Q document? (5) What is to account for many differences between Matthew and Luke if they both used identical sources?" RenÃ© A. quasar - redshift : ☪ + "The name "quasar" is derived from "QUAsi-Stellar radio source," sometimes also called a "quasi-stellar object" or QSO. This means that they look like stars, but there is something different about them. They don't look like galaxies Until 1963, these objects were universally considered to be ordinary stars. However, in that year their "something different" was uncovered -- they have extraordinarily high redshifts. Under the Hubble law, a high redshift means that they are traveling away from us at enormous speeds (some of them supposedly at up to 90 percent of the speed of light!) If they are traveling at enormous speeds -- very much faster than any known galaxy -- then they must be a long way away from us, since they have been traveling fast for a very long time." Ref-0814, p. 276. "The seat of [Halton] Arp's trouble lies in the decades of astronomical observations that have proven to him, over and over again, that the highest redshifts among celestial objects are not due to expansion of the universe, as the Hubble orthodoxy tells us. How does he know? Because over and over again he has discovered that quasars, the most highly redshifted objects in the universe, are often associated in tangible ways with galaxies that are (relatively) close by. If the quasars are close by, then their redshifts cannot be mostly the result of cosmic expansion over vast distances." Ref-0814, p. 275. "Why are their redshifts so different from that of the parent galaxy? Because the "new" matter emits light at longer wavelengths, giving the impression of a Doppler-type shift. Arp believes that the new matter emerges from its parent galaxy with zero inertial mass, and that the mass of these new particles then proceeds to accumulate with time. Light is produced from matter when electrons fall between energy levels within atoms. The wavelength of light coming from a "new" low-mass hydrogen atom will appear to be highly redshifted compared with light from "normal" hydrogen from a laboratory source. The emitted light will become more "normal" with time as the "new" hydrogen gathers mass and becomes more like ordinary hydrogen. Redshift, according to this theory, is a measure of youth, not of recession velocity." Ref-0814, p. 278.

Quirinius : Luke 2:2; Acts 5:37 ☪ "The reference in Luke 2:2 to Quirinius as governor of Syria at the time of the birth of Christ (before the death of Herod the Great in 4 BC) has frequently been thought to be an error, because Quirinius is known to have become imperial legate of Syria in A.D. 6, and to have supervised in that year the enrolment mentioned in Acts 5:37, which provoked the insurrection led by Judas of Galilee. But it is now widely admitted that an earlier enrolment, as described in Luke 2:1ff., (a) may have taken place in the reign of Herod the Great, (b) may have involved the return of everyone to his family home, (c) may have formed part of an Empire-wide census, and (d) may have been held during a previous governorship of Quirinius over Syria." If one is assured that the Father makes a bona fide quotation and not a mere allusion, the problem remains whether he quoted it after consulting the passage in a manuscript or whether he relied on his memory.*" William Varner, "The Didache's Use of the Old and New Testaments", Ref-0164, Vol. 16 No. 1, (Spring 2005), 127:151, p. 133.

quotations - New Testament of Old : ☪ "At least 295 quotations or direct references to the Old Testament have been counted in the New, a total of one verse out of every 22. If we add to this the evident allusions (613, according to C. H. Toy), the proportion reaches to about 10 percent of the New Testament text. . . It is at the same time very remarkable that in the entire New Testament there is not one explicit citation from the Old Testament Apocrypha, those books declared canonical in the sixteenth century by the Roman Church." Ref-0060, p. 97. Apocrypha - uninspired "Nicole estimates 295 quotations, with many more allusions-at least 10 percent of the New Testament text being Old Testament material. D. quote - academic acceptance - Jones : ☪ " . . . it seems a requirement for acceptance as a peer among those involved in such investigations that they play down the accuracy of the Hebrew testimony while extolling that of not only the Assyrian, but any other record than that of the people of the Word. The desire to obtain such recognition is a most powerful, intimidating and driving force. This pressure, acting in concert with the aforementioned presuppositions, must be seen as that pall which overshadows not only the area under discussion but all other related fields as well. Christian and secular inquirers alike seem unable to stand free of this ever compelling vortex." Ref-0186, p. 155. "And to worsen an already lamentable condition while wishing to appear scientific, progressive, and intellectually acceptable by the hierarchy of academia, many Christian quasi scholars add their voice to that bandwagon being unwilling to stand in faith against the tide that would sweep away the infallible witness of Scripture." Ref-0186, p. 159. "All too often the modern Christian who has far better data from which to forge his judgments but being desirous of acceptance by those at the higher echelons of academia, has shamefully compromised in order to achieve that end. In his rarefied domain of Olympus, an academic fraternity dwells and the desire for acceptance by those who have already scaled the pinnacle often overcomes any loyalty to "earnestly content for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints". After all, to be labeled a Biblicist by those who have so scaled is to be deemed uninformed and unworthy; such is appraised as worthy of non-admission or expulsion. Nor may the works of these Olympians be denigrated if one is to remain in the graces of these esoteric fraternities. They must ever be treated with courtesy, even praised and any aberrations criticized with extreme caution. Nor should this be interpreted or confused as an expression of "being Christian" toward the opposing view. It is a self-serving fawning, attempting to raise one's status, gain the esteem and respect of those on the "upper tier" by means of a mutual admiration pact in order to promote oneself among the fraternities of academia. Shame! Faith should be founded on other than this." Ref-0186, p. 165. "The real issue has been to lay before the world of academia and the general public the true nature of the condition and handling of the ancient records of the neighboring kingdoms of the Hebrew people, especially those of the Assyrians, to the intent that all may see the unfair practices, extravagant claims, and brainwashing which has for years gone on in the name of scholarship and education. Again, such dishonest and unscientific practices against the records of any people other than the Hebrews is totally without precedent and bears testimony to our previous charge that an undercurrent of absolute prejudice exists in the realm of academia with regard to the Jewish people of the Bible, their ancient records, and the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." Ref-0186, pp. 185-186. "Let us be careful that in our desire to be considered intellectually respectable we do not expose ourselves to infections which can do us grievous harm in a spiritual sense. The Apostle has already said it all. There were people who called this colossus of a man, this genius--there were people who called him a 'fool'. He was quite content to be a fool for Christ's sake. If you are out for intellectual respectability you will soon get into trouble in your faith . . ." Martyn Lloyd-Jones, Ref-0935, p. 608.

quote - academic acceptance - Moreland : ☪ + "The final virtue I shall mention is fidelity to God and dedication to His cause in the world as one's chief end. The Christian intellectual is here to serve a Name, not to make one. Unfortunately, I have seen too many Christian thinkers who have a certain texture or posture in life that gives the impression that they are far more concerned with assuring their academic colleagues that they are not ignorant fundamentalists than they are with pleasing God and serving His people. Such thinkers often give up too much intellectual real estate far too readily to secular or other perspectives inimical to the Christian faith. This is why many average Christian folk are suspicious of the mind today. All too often, they have seen intellectual growth in Christian academics lead to a cynical posture unfaithful to the spirit of the Christian way. I have always been suspicious of Christian intellectuals whose primary agenda seems to be to remove embarrassment about being an evangelical and to assure their colleagues that they are really acceptable, rational people in spite of their evangelicalism. While we need to be sensitive to our unbelieving friends and colleagues, we should care far less about what the world thinks than about what God thinks of our intellectual life. Fidelity to God and His cause is the core commitment of a growing Christian mind. Such a commitment engenders faithfulness to God and His people and inhibits the puffiness that can accompany intellectual growth." J. P. Moreland, Love your God with all Your Mind: The Role of Reason in the Life of the Soul (Colorado Springs, CO: NavPress, 1997) pp. 110-111.

quote - angelic encounter - Hinn : ☪ + Benny Hinn: "[I saw] a being wearing a black robe, black hood, coming to kill me. I couldn't see his face, but I knew it was the angel of death. I saw his nails and fingers, and I cried out 'Lord Jesus, save me.' I spoke out loud. 'Lord Jesus, save me'. . . I saw angels rush into my room. One of them grabbed that black thing and shoved him against the wall. Another one - now I saw that, I'm telling you God's gospel truth. . . suddenly this - there were two of them that rushed in first, and now this one of them - massive, massive angel. A blond hair, curly blond hair with a very thick gold belt around him, the size of two men, at least, stood there, tall, wide, and he stared at me and stared at me. . . And I looked, and he looked, and suddenly, and I'm, at the same time watching the other angel holding that black figure from me, and a third angel rushed in. God is my witness, before Jesus, I tell you the fact. A third angel rushed in and called him by name and said, 'Michael, Michael, somebody else is in trouble!' . . . now I realize I'm looking at Michael, and Michael speaks back with the voice of Niagara Falls, a thick voice, and said, 'You take care of him,' . . . I've had many experiences with angels since. In fact, nearly every night during that year of glory I would wake up and see them stand by my bed. Some I saw as small as children. I've seen them. And they'd be standing there talking to each other and they'd look at me and every single time I would get the feeling like they're thinking, 'What does God want with this guy?' It was almost like a look of, like a puzzled look on their face. And that's why I do not believe angels socialize with human beings. 'Cause there's nowhere in the Scriptures where they have coffee and tea with you. They come, do a job, and leave."
